Blame part of the energy crisis on fat people

WASHINGTON — Two researchers at the University of Illinois have come up with a series of calculations showing that fat people are literally eating up the nation's precious stores of energy.

They said that if all overweight Americans slimmed down to normal size, the annual savings in energy "would more than supply the annual residential electrical demands of Boston, Chicago, San Francisco and Washington."

The researchers are Dr. Bruce M. Hannon, director of the Energy Research Group at the University of Illinois, and Dr. Timothy G. Lohman, a nutritionist at the university's Physical Fitness Research Laboratory.

Writing in the current issue of the American Journal of Public Health, they said:

"Overweight has heretofore been considered mainly a personal problem with important implications for personal health and well-being. But with the rising specters of energy shortage and world hunger, overweight must become a social problem. The calculation of the fossil fuel energy required to supply the extra food calories to maintain excess body fat helps connect the impact of overeating on energy consumption."

Dr. Hannon and Dr. Lohman then performed a series of calculations, using data of the National Health Survey. The survey found that in 1975 there were 850 million pounds of excess fat on American men and 1.5 billion excess pounds of fat on American women.

The researchers then put all fat people on diets that sliced 600 calories off their daily food intake and assumed that 50 million fat men and 60 million fat women would stick to the diet. Total savings: 5.7 trillion calories.

Further, they calculated that when the 50 million fat men and 60 million fat women reached normal weights, they would be eating so much less that "the total savings due to a lower basil metabolism would be about 3.4 trillion calories per year."

These numbers, in turn, translate to 160 trillion British Thermal Units of energy saved during the dieting period and 100 trillion BTU's saved for each successive year — which is between one-tenth of one percent and one-fifth of one percent of all energy used in the United States annually.

"In more familiar terms, this savings is the energy equivalent of 1.3 billions of gallons of gasoline in the dieting period and about three-quarters of a billion gallons every year thereafter," the researchers said. They added that "about 900,000 autos could be fueled each year with this savings."

John Connally tearfullyrecalls Nov. 22, 1963

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Texas Gov. John Connally, brushing tears from his eyes, Wednesday relived the events "indelibly etched in my memory" of the day in Dallas when he was wounded and President John F. Kennedy was killed by an assassin's bullets.

Connally and his wife Nellie testified on the opening day of the House Assassination Committee's month-long public hearing into Kennedy's slaying.

The Connallys agreed there were three shots — although Connally did not hear the second, which hit him — and they came from behind and to the right of the presidential limousine in which they were riding with Kennedy and his wife Jacqueline.

Their accounts substantially agreed with Connally's evidence before the Warren Commission 14 years ago which concluded Lee Harvey Oswald was the lone assassin.

Connally said he felt the hearings could not answer all the remaining questions about the assassination.

"I wish I could believe that all the speculation and all the rumors could be dispelled. I don't believe that ... Some circumstances are incapable of being solved," he said.

Opening the hearings, committee chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, had cautioned "certain issues may not be resolved at all ... not all questions that can be asked can be answered."

Following the Connallys' appearance, the panel viewed a series of previously published films and photographs which have been the basis of various conspiracy theories of the assassination. But any analysis was left for later sessions.

Thursday's hearings will be concerned solely with the Kennedy autopsy reports and expert analysis on the nature of the wounds.

After viewing a color film of the shooting, Connally said he would not argue with other theories of the number and direction of the fatal shots.

"These things are etched in my mind," he said. "I'm not going to argue with experts. Things we say we are certain about because we are absolutely sure that's what happened."

Good morning!

Idaho candidates not in a debating mood

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If Idaho politicians had their way, Lincoln and Douglas would be the last two candidates ever to meet in open debate.

At least that's the way it seems.

According to Idaho Press Club President Rod Gramer, of all the candidates for major state offices this year, only Republican Congressman Steve Symms and his Democratic challenger Roy Truby have agreed to a public debate.

The press club has been trying to arrange debates between the candidates for governor, U.S. Senate and U.S. House of Representatives.

With the deadline Friday, Gramer said, Symms and Truby are the only two opposing candidates who have both agreed to debate.

In the other races, the hold-outs are the incumbents. Their challengers, on the other hand, are straining at the bit.

Democratic Second District Congressional Candidate Stan Kress is willing to debate incumbent Republican George Hansen, but Hansen can't seem to find the time.

Republican gubernatorial candidate Allan Larsen is ready to go, Gramer said, but Gov. John Evans, a Democrat, won't agree to the part of the debate that allows the candidates to ask questions of each other.

Democratic Senatorial candidate Dwight Jensen is also willing to debate. But incumbent Republican Senator James McClure says his Senate schedule has so far kept him too busy to come to a debate.

Gramer said it "doesn't look very good" at this point, but said final letters had been sent to all candidates. In order to properly schedule the debates, Gramer said, final word must come from the candidates by Sept. 8.

Symms and Truby are scheduled to debate in Moscow on Oct. 10 and in Boise on Oct. 19.

That old aquifer just keeps flowing along

By KEN HODGE
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — Imagine a huge bathtub with the faucets wide open and the drain plug pulled out.

Nobody knows how much water the tub holds, but a conservative estimate is 500 million acre feet or the equivalent of about 250 American Falls Reservoirs.

About 7.5 million acre feet of water is constantly pouring from the faucets into the tub and nearly the same volume of clear, cold water is draining out the other end.

The bathtub is the Snake River Plain Aquifer which quietly flows under 9,000 square miles of southeastern Idaho lava rock and farmland.

Its size boggles the imagination.

"We don't know how deep it is," Dr. C.E. "Chuck" Brockway of the Snake River Conservation Research Center, said. "It is a big dish full of lava that is very permeable to water."

Brockway, a research professor of civil engineering from the University of Idaho, has been trying to get a handle on the huge underground wash basin since 1970.

With funding from the University of Idaho and the Idaho Department of Water Resources, Brockway is developing a computer model of the vast underground lake to help predict changes in its water level which may come about as a result of events on the earth's surface above.

Brockway has developed a computer model to help him predict changes in the vast ground water reservoir as Idahoans develop the land on top of the aquifer.

Like a doctor with a stethoscope, Brockway has been monitoring changes in the water level of the underground lake since the early part of this decade by measuring the water table at more than 100 well sites around the area.

Because flowing water obeys certain laws and mathematical equations as it moves, the data he has gathered can serve as input for his computer model. Since "what goes in comes out," he can predict flow at Thousand Springs and other aquifer outlets after changes take place in aquifer use.

The boundaries of the aquifer stretch from St. Anthony in eastern Idaho to Bliss on the west edge of Magic Valley. The southern boundary is the Snake River and the northern limit is formed by granite deposits along the foothills north of the plain in the Arco and Mud Lake areas.

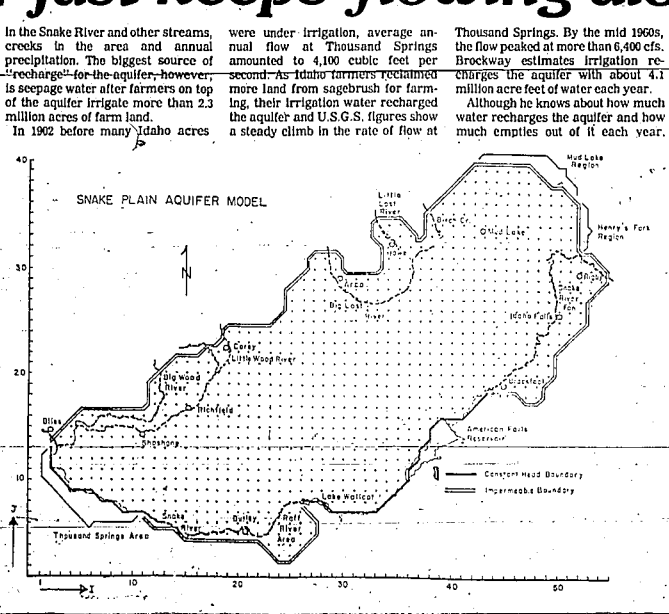
What happens at one end of the aquifer ultimately can affect events downstream in the body of water.

He knows how the elevation of the lake's "surface" changes from the northeast end to the Thousand Springs area near Hagerman and Bliss. The elevation differential causes the water to "flow" at an ever increasing rate as it approaches the spring outlets where it gurgles from crevices in the earth.

Water enters the aquifer from the Big and Little Lost Rivers, leaky spots in the Snake River and other streams, creeks in the area and annual precipitation. The biggest source of "recharge" for the aquifer, however, is seepage water after farmers on top of the aquifer irrigate more than 2.3 million acres of farm land.

In 1902 before many Idaho acres were under irrigation, average annual flow at Thousand Springs amounted to 4,100 cubic feet per second. As Idaho farmers reclaimed more land from sagebrush for farming, their irrigation water recharged the aquifer and U.S.G.S. figures show a steady climb in the rate of flow at Thousand Springs. By the mid 1960s, the flow peaked at more than 6,400 cfs. Brockway estimates irrigation recharges the aquifer with about 4.1 million acre feet of water each year.

Although he knows about how much water recharges the aquifer and how much empties out of it each year, Brockway says the total contents of the lake at any given time is "just a big guess."



The aquifer area is like a huge rock basin which filled with porous lava thousands of years ago and pushed the Snake River to its present southerly location. Assuming the lava bed is an average of 1,000 feet deep and the porosity of the hardened volcanic rock is 10 percent, the basin could hold 520 million acre feet of water. If, as some believe, the basin is one mile deep, the contents of the "lake" would be five times that volume.

It is the vastness of the aquifer which makes Idaho's water potential so great, Brockway said.

Each year thousands of farmers and homeowners pump water from wells sticking like tiny valves into the depths of the aquifer. Their activity barely dents the volume of flow of the aquifer and hardly affects the water table as measured by testing wells in the area.

Not even the drought of 1977 caused an the water table in the aquifer area to drop appreciably.

Brockway's model, however, will help water officials in Idaho to predict the effect of such things as the drought or new irrigation projects on the volume of water in the aquifer.

Brockway said a plan by the IDWR to use the Milner-Gooding Canal to recharge the aquifer by running excess Snake River water through the canal and diverting it to seepage areas is one target for his computer model.

Media shy

Norma Levy runs into a doorway used by workmen at the rear of the federal courthouse in Miami Wednesday. Ms. Levy has been using this area to enter and exit in hopes of dodging the media. The deportation trial on charges of illegal entry into the United States is in its second day.

New Rhodesian plan

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Prime Minister Ian Smith said Wednesday Rhodesia was on the verge of adopting a new plan to deal with insurgents following the crash of a civilian airliner and the massacre of many of the survivors.

Smith told parliament he would announce "a definite trend and the new course we are going to follow" within "a day or two."

Murdoch agrees

NEW YORK (UPI) — Following mass protest resignations by staffers at the New York Daily Metro, New York Post publisher Rupert Murdoch Wednesday agreed to give up his option to purchase the interim tabloid once the city's newspaper strike is concluded.

The reporters and editors walked out after it was revealed that Murdoch made a loan to the paper and had an option to buy it at the end of a strike against the city's three major dailies that entered its fourth week Wednesday.

Legionnaire's study

NEW YORK (UPI) — Medical investigators moved into the crowded Garment District Wednesday in an effort to find the source of Legionnaires disease, which killed one man and was suspected as a cause in eight other cases, two of them also fatalities.

The dead man and the suspected victims all worked in or near three large buildings containing about 150 buying offices, apparel showrooms and manufacturing firms.

Wine poisoning

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (UPI) — The wife of a former congressman died from drinking poisoned wine sent as a gift to three politicians, police said Wednesday.

All three men who received the gift-wrapped bottles of white wine had served as congressmen for the National Blanco (White) Party, before the military closed the congress in June 1973.

Commission extension

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House voted Wednesday to keep the Civil Rights Commission from doing anything about the abortion issue, and agreed to a five-year extension of the commission's life.

The bill, passed on a voice vote, was sent to the Senate, which has passed a different version.

Established in 1957, the commission was originally intended to wind up its work as a watchdog of civil rights laws and go out of business in the 1960s. But its life has been extended repeatedly.

River crests

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — The rain-swollen Jamuna river crested at a record 670 feet at New Delhi Wednesday, forcing about 400,000 persons to flee their homes and threatening millions of others living downstream from the capital.

Officials estimated 47 persons drowned in the New Delhi floods, but Indian news reporters said the death toll was higher and could reach 100.

Gang leader shot

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (UPI) — Police burst into a Chinese restaurant Wednesday night and gunned down one of three leaders of the Baader-Meinhof gang wanted for some of West Germany's most notorious terrorist murders.

Federal Prosecutor Kurt Rebmann said a waiter at the restaurant recognized Willy Peter Stoll, 28, when he walked in for dinner about 6 p.m. and phoned police, who immediately dispatched two plainclothes men to the scene.

Party complains

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — Claiming government troops were virtually occupying its offices, the powerful Conservative party, key group in the organized opposition to Gen. Anastasio Somoza Debayle, threatened Wednesday to close its headquarters.

Party Secretary Edgar Paguada said the party would close its offices unless two armed soldiers in camouflage battle fatigues were withdrawn from the building.

Teachers still strike

By United Press International

Teachers walked picket lines at schools in 13 states Wednesday and more than a half million students sat in half-empty classrooms or took an extended summer vacation.

Festering disputes between teachers and school boards threatened to boost the number of students idled past the one million mark by week's end and delay the start of school in two major cities —Cleveland and Philadelphia.

A UPI tally showed strikes in Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Washington, Vermont, Idaho, Ohio, Louisiana, California, Indiana, Connecticut and New Jersey affected 532,000 students.

Defense costs to be paid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Justice Department has decided to pay defense costs in civil suits for former FBI agents who carried out illegal break-ins, Deputy Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti disclosed Wednesday.

Defense costs will also be paid for all other federal officials implicated, but not indicted, in possible criminal wrongdoing, he said.

Postal demands

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Leaders of three unions Wednesday presented contract demands to Postal Service negotiators, but received no immediate response in talks aimed at averting an illegal nationwide mail strike.

"The Postal Service wanted more time to analyze the union presentation," said a spokesman for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service at the end of the sixth day of a special 15-day bargaining period.

Defense support

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Supporters of the vetoed defense authorization bill threatened Wednesday to tie up the military budget for months with "a long, tough winter" fight to save a nuclear supercarrier opposed by President Carter.

The threats came as the House Armed Services Committee voted 24-6 in favor of overriding the veto. The issue comes before the full House Thursday with the leadership backing Carter's veto over the $2 billion ship.

End of a voyage

CROSSHAVEN, Ireland (UPI) — Tired, lonely, his clothes covered with mold, Indiana University Dean W. Carl Jackson sailed into the Crosshaven harbor Wednesday, ending an "excruciating" 51-day, solo voyage across the Atlantic in a 30-foot ketch.

Jackson, 55, said that while he loves sailing he would never undertake a similar venture alone again.

"I found the loneliness of the second month almost excruciating," Jackson said Wednesday. "I always thought of myself as self-sufficient, but I found life without people had no meaning. I had a definite need for somebody to talk to, someone real and alive and breathing."

Camp David summit begins

CAMP DAVID, Md. (UPI) — President Carter, Egypt's President Anwar Sadat and Israel's Prime Minister Menachem Begin began their Middle East peace summit Wednesday with a two-hour meeting on the sun-flecked patio of Carter's lodge.

Preceding their first joint conference with an appeal for the prayers of mankind, the three leaders started into their labors in complete privacy and with none of their advisers present, said White House press secretary Jody Powell.

He said the first conclave began at mid-afternoon and lasted just under two hours. In keeping with the rule of secrecy imposed by Carter, however, Powell would not disclose the initial topics of discussion or describe the atmosphere of the meeting.

Photographs showed Carter, in sports attire, and Sadat and Begin in coat and tie seated at a wooden table on the patio. Carter was grinning and Begin was smiling at Sadat, who was gesturing in illustration of some comment.

Earlier, the three leaders issued their first joint statement from the ultra-private summit in Carter's guarded mountaintop retreat. It was an inspirational appeal White House aides said was framed by Carter and approved by Sadat and Begin.

"As we meet here at Camp David," it said, "we ask people of all faiths to pray with us that peace and justice result from these deliberations."

Although secrecy was the order of the day, White House officials said enough to indicate the cozy, informal atmosphere was starting to have the effect Carter wanted.

They said Sadat and Begin broke the ice when they encountered each other by accident on a sun-dappled walking path. Cabinet ministers were said to be riding around the camp on bikes.

Wednesday's three-way conference was the first of a series of parleys that may run for a week, 10 days, or longer, in this setting. Powell kept a tight lid on news, even declining to comment on the mood of the proceedings.

"Frankly, we felt it would not be in the best interests to engage in temperature-taking at sporadic times," Powell said.

The opening session was the first working meeting between Sadat and Begin since last Christmas in Egypt, when their dramatic peace contacts started losing steam and heading toward collapse.

Although aides have said Carter's plan is to shun fixed agendas and ease into the issues in a conversational way, the three men eventually will have to deal with the central disputes concerning Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, and the future of the Palestinians.

Sonic booms over Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli jets cracked sonic booms over Beirut as the Camp David summit opened Wednesday in an apparent warning to Syria against further clashes with Israeli-backed Christian militiamen in Lebanon.

Israeli gunboats were also sighted off the southwest port of Tyre for the second time in three days, residents said.

In Beirut's Christian southeast suburbs overnight heavy weapons duels subsided by dawn but sporadic small arms and rocket-propelled grenade salvos broke out again Wednesday night around the suburbs of Ain Rummaneh, Tayyouneh and Badaro, residents and militia sources said.

There were no immediate reports of casualties in the evening firing.

Court overturns ruling on busing in L.A.

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The California Supreme Court Wednesday overturned without comment a lower court order holding up mandatory school busing in Los Angeles, reopening the way for cross-town busing to achieve racial balance in the nation's second largest school district.

Amid predicted chaos in the logistics of moving 30,000 students to classes under the compulsory busing rules, along with another 40,000 to be bused voluntarily, school was due to open Tuesday for the 580,000 students in the district.

The supreme court ordered litigation in the case back to a district court for reconsideration but the order as of Wednesday meant busing would proceed.

The high court made its ruling at the end of a regular session in a one-page order vacating the writ by the Second District Court of Appeals which had ordered a delay in mandatory busing in Los Angeles even though vehicles had been purchased, drivers hired and teachers oriented on the program.

Within minutes after the California court ruling was announced, Bustop, the principal organization opposed to mandatory busing, announced it would immediately take the case to U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist seeking to halt the latest court order.

Rehnquist is the justice with jurisdiction over the federal court system in the southwestern United States.

"We will go to him no later than Friday," said Bustop president Paul Clarke.

The Los Angeles school board scheduled a late night executive session to consider the implications of the California Supreme Court ruling and, presumably, to push ahead with the busing program.

Both sides in gas issue claim wins

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Friends and foes of the natural gas deregulation bill both claimed progress Wednesday as they kept up non-stop efforts to get the two dozen uncommitted senators to declare their intentions.

Vice President Walter Mondale did some personal lobbying on Capitol Hill, then went to Camp David, Md., to report "some rather encouraging news" to President Carter, said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell.

Mondale, Powell said, reported that some senators who were on the fence had decided to fight for the bill to phase out price controls on newly produced gas by 1985.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, leader of a coalition working to kill the bill and substitute emergency gas legislation, said: "From the standpoint of firm commitments, at this point we have at least as many as, if not more than, they do."

Neither side would put a number on its pledges, but Metzenbaum ventured that 20 to 25 senators remain undecided.

Metzenbaum said Carter personally lobbied for the bill up to the moment he left for the Middle East summit conference. Mondale, Energy Secretary James Schlesinger and special trade representative Robert Strauss directed the White House forces Wednesday.

Metzenbaum said he takes confidence from the almost desperate intensity of the White House effort and the fact that the Senate's leaders seem unready to begin debate until next week.

"But when the president and the entire administration are trying to line up votes, that's heavy pressure," Metzenbaum said.

Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., described himself as "a complete question mark." He said he thinks the White House overstated the possible effect on the dollar of rejection of the bill, but that issue still is "the single most persuasive reason for voting for this bill."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd said Wednesday that if the natural gas bill died in the Senate, it would be a sign Congress could not "rise to the challenge" of a vitally important issue.

Wiretap legislation on the skids

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House handed President Carter a major defeat Wednesday, throwing out key sections of his bill to make counterintelligence agents get court permission before conducting electronic eavesdropping in the United States.

President Carter and Attorney General Griffin Bell both said the bill was needed to preserve American civil liberties, but their arguments had less effect than the conservatives who said the bill would further weaken the CIA and other U.S. intelligence agencies.

"To me, this bill weakens the American intelligence gathering capability and take away the presidential prerogative," said Rep. Robert Sikes, D-Fla.

The House scheduled a final vote for Thursday on a measure which was just a shadow of the former proposal. It seems headed for a clash with the Senate, which accepted Carter's proposals last April by a 95-1 vote.

The version before the House now requires only an order from any federal court before ordering wiretaps or other electronic surveillance on U.S. citizens in "national security" cases — the same protection citizens have in criminal cases.

Bell says he'll screen messages

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Attorney General Griffin Bell, aiming to eliminate even the "appearance of improper influence" on Justice Department decisions, announced Wednesday he will require screening of all communications from the White House or Congress on particular cases.

Bell told hundreds of his employees assembled in the department's "Great Hall" he is taking the action to ensure decisions on criminal or civil cases, or legal opinions, will not be tarnished by undue pressure at lower levels of the department.

Bell, a former federal appeals judge, said he and President Carter want to reduce the public's concern "that some decisions at Justice may be the products of favor or pressure or politics."

He said the concern stems mainly from "the partisan activities of some attorneys general" in the past and "the unfortunate legacy of Watergate."

Assistant attorneys general, who are responsible for making virtually all initial decisions, "must be insulated from influences that should not affect decisions in particular criminal or civil cases," Bell said.

"Thus," he said, "all communications about particular cases from members of Congress or their staffs, or members of the White House staff should be referred to my office or the offices of the deputy or the associate attorney general."

He said any relevant information or legal arguments will then be passed on to attorneys working on the case.

Bell said he singled out White House officials and members of Congress not because they are likely to bring undue influence, but because "their positions of power create a potential for unintentional influence ... or more often, may give rise to the broad appearance of improper influence."

Estes must pay taxes

ABILENE, Texas (UPI) — Billie Sol Estes, who built a financial empire on loans gained on nonexistent fertilizer tanks, has formally been ordered to pay $39 million for unpaid taxes on that empire.

A dispatcher for an oil company since his parole from federal prison in 1971, Estes was told he owed the government $39,769,796 on money he fraudulently made from 1959 to 1962. In a separate tax case, Estes' wife, Patsy, was ordered to pay $38 million in unpaid taxes.

In entering the judgment, U.S. District Judge Leo Brewster said the most the Esteses owed was the $39 million figure since the separate decisions on Estes and his wife resulted from different cases based on the same information.

The ruling was entered late Tuesday and was made public Wednesday. The decision was a formalization of a Feb. 10 opinion by Brewster that said the Esteses had failed to pay taxes on their income from those four years.

Nuclear PR

"WHO SAYS THERE'S NO PROTECTION FROM NUCLEAR DISASTER?"

BY ELEANOR SMITH
Pacific News Service

More than 20 years of shrinking expectations and growing public disenchantment with nuclear power have forced the nuclear industry to divide its public relations efforts between "accentuating the positive" and "eliminating the negative."

Today the industry is engaged in both a stepped-up advertising campaign behind "Citizen Atom" and, according to television and movie writers and producers, an ambitious, expensive and controversial effort to block or influence films and TV shows depicting the potential perils of nuclear power.

Targets of the so-called "media watch and suppression effort" have ranged from the ridiculous to the sublime, from Spiderman to Karen Silkwood. Those involved in the productions contend that in many instances the nuclear industry has scored successes in keeping controversial material off the airwaves and movie screens.

"There is an ongoing effort to suppress all anti-nuclear media coverage," said Don Widener, an Emmy Award-winning filmmaker who has produced two films on nuclear power. "Anyone trying to produce nuclear films hears from the industry."

While it is hardly surprising that the industry should be interested in such projects, and in fact denies exercising any influence, Widener believes their meddling has been unfair and damaging. He claims that while working on the 1971 film, "The Powers That Be," he received a threatening phone call in the middle of the night from the public relations director at the Atomic Energy Commission.

According to Widener, the caller asked if he were going to use anything on plutonium in the film, and warned that he would "go to higher sources" to stop him.

During negotiations for his 1977 film, "Plutonium: Element of Risk," Widener said, "PBS (Public Broadcasting System) got a letter from Atomic Industrial Forum President Carl Walske, screaming about the fact that I was doing another film." The letter, addressed to Henry Loomis, president of the Corp. for Public Broadcasting, complained that Widener was the "producer of a slanderously anti-nuclear program, 'The Powers That Be.' "

PBS proceeded to complete the $124,000 film, but then decided to withhold it from national scheduling because it was "one-sided" and "over-simplified." Consequently, only a dozen of the 268 PBS affiliates bought and used the film, which features actor Jack Lemmon demonstrating how to build a plutonium bomb in your kitchen.

Andrew Yocum, PBS director of scheduling, denies Widener's charge that the network yielded to industry pressure. "That was never even mentioned, nor was it thought," he said.

The nuclear industry's switch to the offensive in public relations may be traced to a 1975 memo prepared by Cambridge Reports, Inc., a consulting firm that works for the electric utility industry. "Public support for the electric utility industry is clearly on the decline," the memo said. It then outlined a campaign to "stop the erosion we've seen in the last year in support for nuclear power."

The campaign targeted women, the young, the less educated, lower-income people and blacks — what the firm called "low socio-economic status people ... the weakest link in the anti-nuclear coalition," as those who could be "made to understand."

As public concern about nuclear power continued to build and as orders for new reactors continued to decline, the Atomic Industrial Forum (AIF), the industry's main lobbying arm, initiated the Inforwire, a telecommunications system to spread information to members nationwide. It also conducted a seminar in Las Vegas on "Nuclear Information Strategies: New Setting, New Approaches."

Some of those new approaches were revealed at the industry's 1977 conference in San Francisco. At a seminar on how to "Make TV Work for You," Leonard Roller, public relations consultant, exhorted the crowd of technocrats to "accentuate the positive" in TV interviews, and to "do some investigative reporting of your own — find out what the reporter's attitude is."

"Video is visceral," he said and suggested that they hone their comments into such short catchy slogans as "nuclear power is safer than sex."

The industry last year spent more than $60 million on advertising and public relations, according to the Environmental Action Foundation's Utility Scoreboard. One utility, Georgia Power Co., spent more than $4 million. It has acknowledged that it operates an intelligence program in Atlanta with an annual budget of $750,000 and nine investigators to keep tabs on anti-nuclear protestors and projects.

Armed with the Infowire and the growing public relations budget, the industry has managed to generate almost instantaneous and monumental dissent to what it considers negative media coverage of nuclear power.

In January, 1977, NBC Special Reports aired "Danger: Radioactive Wastes," an investigative report on the problems of nuclear waste disposal. Immediately afterward the Infowire carried an urgent advisory to members to protest the show to NBC officials, government officials and the sponsors, Textron, Inc., and Northwest Mutual Life Insurance Co.

While NBC stood behind the program and issued a point-by-point refutation of the Atomic Industrial Forum charges, the sponsors yielded. Northwestern Mutual said it will never again sponsor a TV documentary on nuclear power, and Textron said it is unlikely it will, either.

CBS and ABC have also dealt with industry efforts to suppress or alter programming. CBS resisted AIF pressure to postpone an episode of "Hawaii Five-O" on a plutonium terrorist plot. And ABC rejected an AIF bid to prevent airing of an episode of "Most Wanted," which depicted a group of plutonium hijackers threatening a large U.S. city. However, several local stations decided independently not to broadcast the "Most Wanted" episode.

Last Spring, CBS officials met with AIF representatives who wanted to "offset the impact" of a two-part episode of the children's show "Spiderman," which dealt with nuclear terrorism. CBS aired the show on April 5 and 12.

"The pro-nuclear lobby is highly organized," said John Angier, producer of the PBS science series "Nova." "They conduct large mailing campaigns," he said and referred to angry mailed protests following two "Nova" programs on nuclear issues, "The Plutonium Connection" and "Incident at Brown's Ferry."

Angier said he wasn't surprised by the protest, only that he received "identical letters of protest from PR men" representing different nuclear companies.

The industry also has attempted to block production of Hollywood films, according to some producers.

Film rights to Tom Scortia and Frank Robinson's book, "The Prometheus Crisis," concerning a reactor meltdown were sold to Paramount Pictures in 1975. A few months later Paramount dropped the option, blaming "problems with the script" and "changes in management."

However, producer Peter Bart, whom Paramount assigned to oversee the film, claimed that an AIF representative visited the studio to discuss the production shortly afterward.

"It was all very slick," Bart told Richard Pollock of Critical Mass Journal, an anti-nuclear publication. "Nobody from AIF ever said, 'We're going to blow up your office,' " but, Bart said, they got their message across.

Paramount, Pollock noted, is a subsidiary of Gulf & Western, which also owns the Energy Production Group (EPG), a division that manufactures products for nuclear power plants. A third of Gulf & Western's gross earnings for 1975 were related to the EPG.

The rights for "The Prometheus Crisis" have since been sold to independent filmmaker George Braunstein of Crystal Juke-Box Film Corp. Braunstein said he has had problems getting financing. "Everyone is pretty scared to get involved. It's too controversial for a main studio ... It's like an ant taking on an elephant."

Similar problems have troubled filmmakers Buzz Hirsch and Larry Cano of Canand Productions. Since 1974 they have been trying to make a documentary film on the death of Karen Silkwood, an employee of the Kerr-McGee plutonium plant near Oklahoma City.

Silkwood died in a mysterious auto accident on the way to a meeting with a New York Times reporter to whom she had promised to divulge evidence on the plant's safety violations.

Her family is suing Kerr-McGee and police agents for conspiracy to violate her civil rights and cover up the facts of her death.

Hirsch and Cano have spent $90,000 on the project, but have met obstacles all along the way. According to affidavits by witnesses, Kerr-McGee investigators have contacted their friends, sources and even the California finance company that held the loan on Cano's car.

A production assistant, who asked not to be identified to avoid further harassment, said her home was broken into and files and papers relating to the film were rifled. When police arrived to investigate, she said, the first thing they asked was, "How deep are you in the Silkwood case?"

In early 1977 Kerr-McGee subpoenaed all the filmmakers' research material, claiming the papers were relevant to the Silkwood family lawsuit. The filmmakers lost the first legal battle to withhold the evidence, but won an appeal in federal court a year ago.

Hirsch and Cano now are seekign funds from independent sources.

Cano said that the apparently unhindered airing of a recent episode of the "Lou Grant" TV show, which appeared to draw heavily from the Silkwood case, might be "a breakthrough. It opens the door and gives an air of respectability to the subject," he said.

Another door-opener could be "Power," a film starring Jane Fonda and Jack Lemmon in a tale about an accident at a nuclear power plant that also resembles the Silkwood case. Producer Michael Douglas said he was not intimidated by the nuclear industry. His film is scheduled for release next spring.

Why has TV started Monday Night Football so soon?

Sports fans Monday night were treated to a boring, lopsided football game on television between the Baltimore Colts and the Dallas Cowboys.

It was the first Monday Night Football game of the year; Dallas won it 38-0.

The same night, the Los Angeles Dodgers came back from a 4-0 deficit to beat the San Francisco Giants 5-4 in a critical National League West baseball game.

The 5-4 Dodger victory gave the Dodgers a two-game lead over the Giants in the National League West and may have inflicted a serious psychological blow to the Giants' chances for winning a pennant this year.

It was a great game, the papers said, but it wasn't on TV.

It seems the networks have discontinued Monday Night Baseball in this, the last month of the season, and picked up Monday Night Football, instead.

How dumb.

The football season will crunch along four more months but the baseball season is winding right down to the wire. The World Series is only a few weeks away and none of baseball's division titles are yet decided.

In other words, it's the height of the baseball season. And television is broadcasting almost meaningless early season football games on Monday nights.

Sports fans should just be glad they can read about the big baseball games in the Times-News the morning after they happen.

NEW YORK — Sen. George McGovern startled colleagues the other day by raising the question whether "the international community" ought to find some way of using "military force" to put an end to the ruthless savagery now going forward in Cambodia.

Every report from that once gentle country is revolting — forced labor, mass relocations of the population, inhuman regimentation, the bloody elimination of any form of dissodence.

All this is repellent to any civilized person, but it did seem strange to hear talk of armed intervention from one of the leaders of the late anti-war movement. One of the cardinal points of that movement, after all, was that the United States had no business trying by military force to impose any particular social order on a country of which it knew little and in which American interests were limited.

On second thought, McGovern's outburst (if that is what it was) may not have been so odd as it appeared. For one thing, the anti-war movement, at the end, included a lot of people who had supported — or at least not opposed — the war in the beginning (including me). That reflects the fact that the Vietnam war derived, at least partially, from the kind of liberal internationalism and anti-communism that found perfect expression in John Kennedy's inaugural address.

This view of the world and of American interests was carried to its logical but unpleasant extreme — the United States as "policemen of the world" — in Vietnam. It's not surprising that numerous liberal internationists recoiling more from the extreme than from their basic view, turned against the war, sometimes the more intensely for having participated or acquiesced in its origins.

And it isn't too surprising, either, that the old impulse to clean things up around the world should surface again, however unwisely, this time in revulsion against the horrors of Cambodia.

This impulse is sometimes derided as a liberal failing, but conservatives share it too — about eastern Europe, for example. Not liberals but Gerald Ford and Henry Kissinger wanted to involve the United States in Angola, and at that with the weakest of the three contending forces; fortunately, liberals and conservatives in Congress joined to stop them.

At least, this time, McGovern suggested action by "the international community" not just by the United States alone. And maybe it's just possible that he and many other Americans would be willing to fight, or support a fight — in sharp contrast to the Vietnam experience — against a demonstrated evil like the present regime in Cambodia.

In Vietnam, be it remembered, too many evils they were supposed to be fighting against simply were not credible — and are even less so three years after the end of the war. Remember "Asian Communism" with its headquarters in Peking? Well, China's leader is throwing his arms around the Shah of Iran these days, while Vietnam and China hover on the verge of armed hostilities.

Remember all the dominoes that were bound to fall if the war in Vietnam were lost? Remember the blood bath the North Vietnamese were going to inflict on the South Vietnamese? Hundreds of thousands would die, President Nixon said repeatedly, and Nelson Rockefeller escalated the figure to millions. Remember the dire warning Lyndon Johnson appended to his "nervous Nellie" speech?

"If we fail in frustrating this aggression," he said on May 18, 1966, the war that would surely come in Asia would produce casualties in the hundreds of thousands — perhaps in the millions."

That there might be more solid reason for fighting in Cambodia than there ever was in Vietnam would not necessarily justify or make successful a new military involvement in southeast Asia; but it's only fair to note that McGovern was talking about Cambodia, not Vietnam. Haven't "hawks" warned that every possible foreign venture should not be looked upon as another Vietnam?

A less charitable way to view the McGovern statement is that he'd like to run for president again, despite a lack of popular demand; therefore he made an early move to counter any lingering impression that he is "too soft" to be president. Or he might have had in mind the strident conservative attempts to place on those who oppose the war in Vietnam the responsibility for today's outrages in Cambodia.

If the latter, McGovern might better have pointed out that Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger — not the anti-war movement — launched, first, the secret bombing of Cambodia in 1969; then on May 1, 1970 the American-Vietnamese invasion of that country that widened the Indochina war and begin the five years of catastrophic fighting that ended in the present tragedy in Cambodia.

Senate cuts $11 billion from the 1979 budget

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Responding to changed economic circumstances and anti-spending sentiment around the country, the Senate Wednesday cut $11 billion from the 1979 federal budget it tentatively approved in May.

It rejected several proposals to cut much more.

The budget resolution was approved 56-18.

The proposed budget for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 calls for $577.7 billion in new "budget authority" — a commitment for future outlays, some of which actually would not be spent until later years.

The figure — which compares to $500 billion this year — is $11 billion lower than Congress tentatively approved last May for 1979. The Senate Budget Committee, which proposed it, said the cut was prompted by lower unemployment and higher inflation than had been estimated.

The Senate proposed $489.5 billion in "outlays," or actual spending, during the year, a cut of $9.3 billion from its May estimate, and a deficit of $42.3 billion, down $8.6 billion from the earlier estimate.

More than half of these cuts represent re-estimates of what programs actually will cost in 1979. Less than half are actual program cuts.

The Senate budget now goes to conference with one recently passed by the House, calling for $561 billion in budget authority, $489.8 billion in outlays and a $39.8 billion deficit.

The Senate rejected 45-25 an amendment by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., to cut another $17.7 billion across the board on top of the $11 billion budget authority cut.

Then it rejected 38-35 a proposal by Sen. William Roth, R-Del., to cut about $10 billion in areas such as international affairs, science, environment, transportation, education and jobs, health, welfare and justice, on top of the $11 billion.

All parties said their proposals would send a "clear signal" that Congress has heard the sentiment for less spending and less taxes being voiced around the country.

British make up for some 1812 hostilities

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The British compensated the Library of Congress Wednesday for three books which were used as kindling when the Redcoats burned down the U.S. Capitol — and the library inside it — during the War of 1812.

Brigadier David Houston, military attache in the British embassy, presented Librarian Daniel J. Boorstin with contemporary five pound and one pound notes and with 14 rare antique shillings as payment.

The three books, worth about $13 at the time, were published by Oxford University Press, and the ceremony helped observe the 500th anniversary of the oldest publishing house in English or England. It was founded 14 years before Columbus discovered America.

The books were Lord Edward Hyde Clarendon's "History of the Rebellion," William Blackstone's "Commentaries of the Laws of England" and Robert E d o n's "Jurisprudentia-Philologica."

Actually, not only these but nearly all of the library's collection was destroyed in the fire. A few survived and remain in the library's rare book collection.

The library was housed in the Capitol until 1897, when it moved into its ornate headquarters across the street.

Library officials noticed in preparing for the ceremony that few Oxford University Press books were in Jefferson's library.

Less heroin available

By JONATHAN DEDMON
Newhouse News Service

WASHINGTON — There has been a major reduction in the availability of heroin in the United States, federal officials say.

They believe that a Mexican government program to eradicate poppy fields and the arrest of some top international narcotics traffickers ahve been responsible for the decline.

"There are still people buying heroin," Peter Bensinger, head of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration, said in an interview. "But there are substantially fewer than a few years ago."

Bensinger said a number of indicators point to a decline in the availability and use of heroin:

• Overdose deaths declined from 458 during the first three months of 1976 to 111 during the last three months of 1977.

• A soon-to-be released study by the National Institute on Drug Abuse estimates that the number of heroin addicts in the United States declined last year by 100,000 — to 456,000.

• Near-record prices are being paid for heroin on the street and it is of very poor quality.

Bensinger said some former heroin dealers and users are turning to cocaine and PCP or "angel dust" as substitutes. While he doesn't endorse use of those drugs, they probably are an improvement over heroin, "which is a killer."

In addition to the reduction in overdose deaths, emergency room visits and treatment for heroin overdoses have been cut by more than 60 percent during the past two years.

Another indicator used by DEA to measure heroin activity is sampling the purity of heroin at or near the street-sale level.

According to the DEA, the purity of heroin being sold on the street has declined from 6.6 percent to 4.9 percent during the past two years.

"Some police departments even report purities of 2 and 3 percent," Bensinger says.

After the "French Connection" from Turkey was broken in the early 1970s, Mexico quickly became the major heroin supplier for the United States.

By 1975 it was estimated that 90 percent of the heroin entering the United States was from Mexico.

Beginning in late 1975, the Mexican government began spraying a herbicide, 2,4-d, on poppy fields.

Last year some 22,000 acres were sprayed. DEA estimates that the fields could have produced 10 tons of heroin.

The United States provides some $10 million to the Mexican government in narcotics control aid. The aid is in the form of helicopters, maintenance, supplies and training and augments a Mexican narcotics control budget of some $60 million.

The Mexican government recently sent some 2,000 federal troops into the major poppy-growing areas. Federal officials believe the raids have reduced the flow of heroin into this country from some 7.5 tons annually to 3.5 tons.

Nixon plans another speech

BILOXI, Miss. (UPI) — Former president Richard Nixon has accepted an invitation to speak at a Gulf Coast veterans day program in November, an American Legion official said Wednesday.

Harvey Pucheu, commander of the Joe Graham Post 119 in Gulfport, said Nixon notified the group Tuesday night that he would be "willing and anxious to come to the coast"

American Legion officials asked Nixon several weeks ago to speak at the Nov. 11 program at the Gulf Coast Coliseum.

Pucheu said Nixon was asked because he is a "big friend of veterans."

American Legion officials extended the invitation to Nixon through Mississippi Sen. James O. Eastland, a long-time friend of the former president.

Pucheu said the "logistics" had not been worked out on the Nixon speech but indicated it would likely be a night address.

Jenner baby arrives

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Chrystle Jenner, wife of Olympic decathalon gold medalist Bruce Jenner, gave birth to the couple's first child Wednesday, an 8-pound, 7-ounce boy.

A spokesman for the couple said both mother, 26, and son were doing fine at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, where the infant was delivered at 8 a.m.

They have not yet picked a name for the baby.

Feminine presence

PARIS (UPI) — Florence d'Harcourt, one of 19 women deputies of the 491-member French National Assembly, filed an official request Wednesday to equip parliament with a separate shower and a women's hairdresser "in full recognition of the feminine presence."

In her request, sent to National Assembly President Jacques Chaban Delmas, Mrs. d'Harcourt said, "A modern parliament must take the feminine presence into consideration and make the same facilities accessible to all.

Commander speaks

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — The new national commander of the American Legion Wednesday urged the government to resume development of the B-1 bomber and the neutron bomb and to upgrade the voluntary army.

In his first news conference since his election last month as head of the 2.7-million-member veterans' group, John M. Carey of Grand Blanc, Mich., discussed the group's concern for the military strength and preparedness.

He said he realizes many of the staunch supporters of a strong military are no longer in Congress, so the Legion will shift more of its lobbying effort to the White House. It will seek to get the Carter Administration to reverse its decisions against the B-1 bomb and the neutron bomb, he noted.

Thorpe withdraws

LONDON (UPI) — Former Liberal party leader Jeremy Thorpe, facing charges of conspiracy to murder and incitement to murder, will not take part in the party's national campaign in the forthcoming general election battle, Liberal officials said Wednesday.

They said the decision was made at a meeting last week between Thorpe and the present party leader, David Steel.

But they said Thorpe will run as an official Liberal party candidate in his own North Devon parliamentary district, although other Liberal leaders will not go there to speak in his support.

They said Steel also will take over Thorpe's role as party foreign affairs spokesman at the annual Liberal convention opening at Stockport Sept. 12.

Thorpe, 49, was charged with three other men Aug.4 at Minehead, in Somerset, with conspiracy to murder Norman Scott, 38, a one-time male model, who has claimed he and Thorpe once were homosexual lovers. Thorpe has consistently denied the assertion.

Thorpe also was charged with inciting one of the other three — David Holmes, 46 — to murder Scott.

Former Hughes aide forced to leave island

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (UPI) — Johnny Meier, fugitive former aide to Howard Hughes who found brief sanctuary in the paradise island of Tonga, fled his refuge after his friend the king turned against him, diplomatic sources said Wednesday. They said he probably is in Canada.

Meier, wanted in Utah and Nevada on fraud and income tax evasion charges involving millions of dollars, disappeared when King Taufa'ahau Tupou IV informed him he was no longer welcome.

The sources said the king also had planned to withdraw Meier's Tongan diplomatic passport, which he used to flee Sydney, Australia, in July to avoid extradition to the United States.

The sources said Meier's whereabouts were unknown, but they noted he held Canadian citizenship and believed he had returned to his family there.

Meier is wanted on federal charges of obstruction of justice in Utah and income tax evasion in Nevada. He is involved in one suit seeking more than $8 million in allegedly worthless mining claims and in another for back taxes of $7.9 million in another court action.

Meier's prospects of a haven in the feudal Kingdom of Tonga — a group of some 200 tiny South Pacific islands — looked promising when he first arrived.

He had a charter from the king to open a bank, but the monarch became uneasy when the country's legislative assembly and business community started complaining.

The king became disillusioned when Meier failed to live up to a pledge to assist in the development of the island's airport, the sources said. In addition, a U.S. Embassy official from Wellington met with the monarch in his capital of Nuku'alofa and explained the charges faced by Meier in the United States, the sources said.

Meier worked for the Howard Hughes organization from 1959 to 1970, and when the late tycoon moved to Las Vegas in 1967 was known as a "scientific adviser." Subsequently he told a Las Vegas court he never finished college.

The U.S. government declared Meier a fugitive Jan. 3, 1975, when he failed to turn up in a Nevada court on federal income tax charges.

Karpov plans quick win in tournament

BAGUIO, Philippines (UPI) — World chess champion Anatoly Karpov swam and searched for sea shells at a beach resort Wednesday on the eve of the 19th game in his $550,000 title match against challenger Viktor Korchnoi.

The trip to the Bauang beach resort was part of 27-year-old Karpov's plan to put a quick end to the match against Soviet defector Korchnoi.

A victory for Karpov, who leads the series 4-1, would put him just a win away from retaining the crown he won by default from American chess genius Bobby Fischer.

Six victories are needed to win the match and the $350,000 first prize. Draws do not count.

Karpov requested postponement of the 19th game originally scheduled for Tuesday to prepare himself to win and satisfy the longings of his homesick aides, a source close to the Soviets said.

"Karpov thinks the 19th game is very important," a Yugoslav source close to the Russians said. "He wants to prepare for it."

A win for Karpov could finally break Korchnoi's will. In the last game, Korchnoi showed renewed strength and composure that elicited a rare tribute from the Soviets.

Davenport makes a point

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Edward Davenport says his 110-mile ride by motorized wheelchair over pothole-ridden state roads from Norristown to the Capitol proves that handicapped persons are versatile enough to use mass transit.

Davenport, crippled by polio at age five, finished his six-day journey Tuesday with a plea that Pennsylvania officials buy vehicles called Transbuses, which are specially equipped for handicapped persons, when purchasing new mass transit vehicles.

Picture of bishop in bed raising Greek eyebrows

ATHENS, Greece (UPI) — The Greek Orthodox Church found itself in the midst of a scandal Wednesday after Athens newspapers published badly focused photographs purporting to show a bishop lying in bed with the wife of a defrocked priest.

Neither face in the bedroom photograph was clearly identifiable, although newspapers claimed that the half-naked man in the picture was Bishop Stylianos of Preveza.

According to the newspapers, the 68-year-old bishop was caught in the compromising position by the woman's husband, who took the photograph and then tried to blackmail him with it.

The husband, defrocked priest Stefanos Kaskanis, denied the woman was his wife but admitted to reporters that he tried to use the photograph to blackmail the bishop.

Bishop Stylianos denied he had been in bed with the woman and said the photograph was a fake.

But the Holy Synod of the Church of Greece nevertheless asked Stylianos to submit a written explanation to a special church investigating committee.

Unlike the Catholic church, which demands celibacy from its clergy, the Greek Orthodox church allows priests to marry but requests celibacy from its bishops.

The mayor of Preveza, a town on the west coast of Greece, said that the allegations had so upset Stylianos' parishioners that the bishop would have to be transferred.

Lab bacteria produce insulin

DUARTE, Calif. (UPI) — In a development that could affect millions of diabetics, a team of scientists Wednesday reported the first production of human insulin in laboratory bacteria serving as hormone "factories."

The report was followed by the announcement that Eli Lilly and Co. of Indianapolis plans to manufacture and market human insulin made with the new bacterial process, but officials emphasized it will be some time before the insulin is available commercially.

Laboratory production of the hormone means that persons suffering from diabetes will have a plentiful supply of insulin for injections when needed. The insulin now being used is extracted from the pancreas of slaughtered cattle and pigs.

Dr. Keeichi Itakura, one of the City of Hope Medical Center researchers who announced the new development, said that while the human population is increasing rapidly with an associated increase in diabetics, the animal population is decreasing.

"The insulin shortage becomes more severe every year," he said. "There are about 6 million known diabetics in the United States alone and about 1 million require insulin."

The development, a major genetic engineering feat, used the recently developed techniques by which genes are created artificially and then combined with the hereditary material of laboratory variants of the common bacteria, E. coli.

A gene serves as a blueprint to tell a cell how to make a specific chemical product.

"We've managed to trick E. coli bacteria into making human insulin," Dr. Arthur Riggs said in an interview.

"It took a year, beginning last September until the final product. That was on Aug. 9."

Only a few grams of insulin were produced in the laboratory at the sprawling medical center near Los Angeles, but a spokesman said it was more than adequate to prove the point.

About 300 units, or 3 cubic centimeters of insulin, are produced from a slaughtered cow or pig, the spokesman said. The average diabetic insulin user needs about 40 units or four-tenths of a cubic centimeter each day.

"It's a tremendous breakthrough," said Joan Hoover, executive director of the Washington, D. C. affiliate of the American Diabetes Association. "It will help the problems of insulin supply and be of great value to diabetics."

The pioneering research effort was supported with funds supplied by Genetech, Inc., a research and development firm in South San Francisco.

Robert Swanson, president of Genetech, said Eli Lilly will make the insulin under contract to Genetech.

"We have completed a joint development effort," he said. "But its' hard to tell when it will be available. There is a lot of work that still has to be done."

The work on insulin began shortly after the same team of researchers chemically synthesized the hormone somatostatin in the first demonstrated practical use of recombinant DNA technology — the introduction of an alien or artificial gene into bacteria.

The somatostatin molecule is made up of 14 amino acids — the chemical building blocks of all proteins. Human insulin, by comparison, is formed by two individual chains of 51 amino acids.

Jet bunny Thumper real record setter

PALMDALE, Calif. (UPI) — The newest species of "jet bunny" has never seen the inside of Hugh Hefner's private plane.

This particular bunny may have set several other records, including the Northrop Corp.'s claim for it — "the only 9 G rabbit in the world." It could also go into the record books as the only "passenger" ever flown in the F-18, a single-seat fighter Northrop is developing for the Navy.

Before taking the plane on a nationwide demonstration tour, Northrop's chief test pilot, Hank Chouteau, put it through its paces on a test flight at almost supersonic speeds, diving and twisting through a series of aerobatic exercises that raised stresses to 9 Gs — nine times the force of gravity.

After landing, a crewman discovered a stowaway in the plane's avionics compartment — a small jackrabbit.

The crew named him "Thumper, the 9G rabbit."

They theorized that Thumper had hopped into the air conditioning unit hooked to the plane to keep equipment cool when it is parked in the desert sun, and then was blown into the aircraft with the blast of cold air when the unit went into operation.

The crew kept Thumper for a day to see if he suffered any ill effects from his experience.

Soviet court may suspend Crawford term

MOSCOW (UPI) — In a surprise move, the prosecutor asked a Soviet court Wednesday to give American businessman F. Jay Crawford a five-year suspended sentence for allegedly buying rubles on the black market — a sentence which would set him free.

If the judge accepts the prosecutor's recommendation — as is likely — Crawford, 37, will walk out of court a free man almost three months after his arrest.

But Crawford, who pleaded innocent to the charges that he said were brought in retaliation for the arrest of two alleged Soviet spies in the United States, asked the court to exonorate him fully.

The court recessed to consider the evidence presented in the two-day trial and a verdict was not expected before today.

The charges carry a maximum eight-year term in a labor camp.

In a 40-minute summation sprinkled with quotes from Lenin, state prosecutor Mikhail Ilyukhin asked that Crawford be convicted of violating Soviet currency speculation laws but be given a suspended sentence because of his background.

"Also it should be remembered that he improved economic relations between the Soviet Union and the United States."

Crawford's Soviet lawyer Leonid Popov delivered a quiet 30-minute summation in which he said the Soviet KGB had failed to prove its case against the Mobile, Ala., businessman.

Crawford, the Moscow representative of the International Harvester Export Co., is on trial with three Soviet co-defendents who pleaded guilty to charges of helping him exchange $8,500 for 20,000 rubles on Moscow's flourishing black market.

Loan irks newspaper reporters

NEW YORK (UPI) — The editorial staff of the interim strike paper New York Metro walked off the job Wednesday after learning New York Post publisher Rubert Murdoch made a loan to the paper and had an option to buy it at the end of the strike.

Metro Publisher Frederick Iseman, who revealed the Post's tie with the interim tabloid Tuesday night, vowed, however, "We will continue to pubish with (Newspaper) Guild people."

The financial revelation triggered the resignations of editor Alvin Davis, managing editor Richard Roberts and city editor Jeffrey Schmalz early Wednesday. Hours later, the Metro's 60-member editorial staff, consisting mostly of out-of-work New York Times staffers, walked off the job.

Schmalz said Iseman had disclosed that he had secretly borrowed "several hundred thousand dollars" from Murdoch to keep the Metro afloat after its second day of operation.

Iseman later acknowledged that Murdoch had made a "short-term" loan and retained an option to buy the paper, or its name, at the end of the newspaper strike, but added he expected to newspaper to go out of existence when the strike ended.

Newspaper workers, who have been off the job for four weeks, fear such an arrangement would put Murdoch in a position to shut the money-pressed Post after the strike and continue with the Metro as a non-union paper.

Legionnaires disease hits garment area

NEW YORK (UPI) — Medical investigators moved into New York's crowded Garment District Wednesday in an effort to trace an outbreak of Legionnaires disease, which killed one man and was suspected as a cause in six other cases, one also a fatality.

The dead man and the suspected victims all worked in one or more of three large buildings containing about 150 buying offices, apparel showrooms and manufacturing headquarters.

The f[illegible]eral and local investigators be[illegible] systematic survey to determine the extent of the disease and the source of its airborne bacteria. Air conditioning, identified as a source in outbreaks of the disease elsewhere, was initially ruled out because none of the buildings has a central cooling system.

Specialists from the city's Health Department and the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta fanned out throughout the three buildings interviewing workers.

Notices were posted urging any persons with symptoms to see their physicians or contact autholties. Officials set up a special hotline for persons suffering from symptons to call.

Police seize boats, drugs

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (UPI) — Almost 100 bales of marijuana estimated to be worth $3 million were confiscated Wednesday and six people arrested in an alleged coastal drug smuggling effort.

Two men were arrested by local police on a beach at Ellisville Harbor while allegedly loading the 50-pound bales from motorboats into a pickup truck containing 46 bales of marijuana.

Two other people fled the beach when police arrived, but following a foot chase they were later arrested at a home in North Plymouth where another pickup truck containing 45 bales was confiscated.

The 45-foot schooner Roger S. Maul was seized by the Coast Guard off Ellisville Harbor and brought to the Sandwich Coast Guard Station where its two crewmembers were arrested by State Police.

In addition, police said a freighter was boarded by the Coast Guard off the coast of Plymouth and was suspected of being involved in the smuggling.

Meats, grains post strong advance in futures markets

CHICAGO — Meats and grains advanced strongly in commodity futures trading Wednesday.

Commodity News Service said live cattle moved up 127 to 70 points in heavy trading that saw an estimated 28,102 contracts change hands. Nearbys were strongest despite fairly steady prices in live markets and a dip of a dollar per hundredweight in choice steer carcasses.

Feeder cattle rose the daily trading limit of 150 points in a heavy trade of 1,798 contracts.

Live hogs posted strong gains with nearby contracts advancing the most. The day's settlements were 132 to 57 points higher, encouraged by higher prices at terminal markets and lighter runs. Volume was 7,641 contracts.

Pork bellies ended the day sharply higher although settlement prices wsere below the day's limit up highs as a result of some profit taking and commission house liquidation. The close was 190 to 175 points higher on a trade of 3,848 contracts. Aggressive buying was attributed to increased packer demand for products, higher midday quotes and strength in the cash hog market.

Wheat firmed behind commercial and professional buying, ignoring limited local activity and some commission house selling on the way to gains of ¾ cent to 4¾ cents per bushel.

Commercials turned sellers at the close in the corn pit, trimming earlier gains from local buying. Increased export business was a supporting factor, and prices firmed before late profit taking developed. The close was unchanged to a half cent off.

Beans led the soybean complex higher, as weather conditions appeared favorable for the crop development. Despite some late day trade long profit taking, beans closed 6½ to 9 cents higher, while oil closed 27 to 11 points up and meal was 1.30 to 40 cents higher.

Maine potatoes opened mostly lower with May off 8 cents but moved back to the unchanged level and subsequently showed some advance. Local liquidation applied pressure to May, which ended off a nickel at 7.75 cwt. The settlement was 2 cents higher to 5 lower on a trade of 1,622 cars which was described as mostly technical in light of unchanged fundamentals.

New York Sugar 11 reversed a lower opening and ended 25 to 19 points ahead on an estimated volume of 6,850 lots.

New York Comex silver declined 550 to 650 points on a turnover of 12,000 contracts on heavy arbitrage selling from Chicago in the afternoon.

New York Comex gold fell 100 to 120 points on local and trade selling, with volume of 15,000 contracts.

Bureaucracies enduring

© Field Enterprises, Inc.

I respectfully submit the addition of the Porter-Givens Perception that the delay and expense involved in any action soar in perpendicular proportion to the number of approvals essential to take that action.

(Richard A. Givens is the former New York regional director of the Federal Trade Commission, and is now a member of the New York-based law firm of Botein, Hays, Sklar and Herzberg.)

The Porter-Givens Perception was inspired by the California tax rebellion and the resulting uproar over whether Proposition 13 heralds an actual cut in federal government waste and, thus, a fundamental change in the direction of more efficient, leaner federal regulatory agencies.

Some of the dangers confronting us are these:

(1) As long as the heads of the agencies can, in effect, judge their own performance, change will be difficult. It is the meat, not the fat, that may be cut.

(2) When and as important services are cut back, pressure for restoring them will become intense and in some cases, almost impossible to resist.

(3) So if, say, property taxes are not pushed back up (and many experts consider the property tax a bad tax anyway), other taxes — most likely, state, federal and even local income taxes — will rise to fill the gaps.

(4) Thus you, the U.S. taxpayer, will be hit in the pocketbook either way. And the older and more wastefully entrenched the bureaucracy is, the better its defense will be. Every layer will be found to be absolutely necessary for a vital reason, untouchable and sacrosanct.

Can a dent be put in this monstrous creation of ours? Of course it can — but it will take dedication, determination and lots of guts to refuse to accept no for an answer from any of the separate bureaucracies.

As just one tiny illustration, consider the plain English movement — which was begun in New York to force the writing of consumer contracts in words consumers could understand and which has sparked federal proposals to compel simplifying of federal regulations. Some agencies actually have started on the simplification route but the incentive for the insiders always is to make the system more complicated, not simpler.

A comprehensive review of subject XYZ almost always will disclose at least 1,000 areas requiring more elaboration, not less.

Just think about the proposed new securities code, and to some extent, the proposed new federal criminal code — and you need no more examples from me.

So what is the way out? "Call on outsiders who have no stake in the system to recommend the changes," insists Givens. His favorite example is the Hoover commission of long ago which at that time recommended major simplification of that era's bureaucracy.

To explain, just as X-rays can look inside a bone structure from outside the body, a chart could be drawn to show what goes on inside a bureaucracy before a simple task can be completed. The chart would examine the inside of the agency from our (the user's or "victim's") outside point of view.

At every "layer," members would have to report how much time they spend in preparing or reviewing a memo for permission to submit a memo to a higher authority, for permission to submit still another memo to still another higher authority, etc., etc.

There is simply no justification — none! — for so many steps, so many delays, so many expenses, piled one on top of the other. This is the way our mammoth bureaucracy can be slashed.

Anheuser-Busch plans tests of lemon drink

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Anheuser-Busch Inc., the world's largest brewer, will soon test-market a lemon-flavored soft drink.

August A. Busch III, chairman and president, said Tuesday the drink will have "all natural ingredients" and no chemical preservatives. Busch said the drink, to be called "Chelsea," will contain a "blend of real lemon and lime juices, real apple, spice and other natural flavors."

It will be pasteurized and contain no caffeine, Busch said, and will have one-third less sugar and one-third fewer calories than most soft drinks.

Details of the test marketing plans were not disclosed.

The move by Busch into the soft-drink market had been expected since earlier this year, when three members of the board at both Busch and the Seven-Up Co. left the board at Seven-Up to avoid a possible conflict of interest.

Stocks continue big advance

NEW YORK (UPI) — Stocks moved sharply and broadly higher Wednesday afternoon with gambling, airline and selected oil issues pacing the second day of a massive rally.

The Dow Jones industrial average, up nearly 13 points earlier, was ahead 9.35 points to 895.96 around midafternoon. Its 7.28-point gain Tuesday was the greatest in three weeks.

Advances led declines, 1,156 to 366, among the 1,887 issues crossing the New York Stock Exchange tape.

The five-hour NYSE turnover amounted to about 36,300,000 shares, up from the 25,860,000 traded during the corresponding period Tuesday.

Prices were higher in active trading of American Stock Exchange issues.

Analysts said the market's surge, a continuation of Tuesday's rally, was sparked by Resorts International's Atlantic City casino profits, Exxon's discovery of hydrocarbons offshore New Jersey and record airline traffic.

Also, Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller aided the rally when he told the Senate Finance Committee the economy needed a 1979 tax cut and capital spending incentives. But he had reservations about the House's $16.3 billion bill.

In addition, Miller recommended a year's delay in Social Security tax and minimum wage hikes to fight inflation. He also plugged for President Carter's energy bill that Congress is debating this week to bolster the dollar.

The dollar was stronger on foreign exchanges early Wednesday, but slipped in late Frankfurt trading. Observers tied the early rise to shaky hopes for positive actions at the Middle East peace talks at Camp David.

Gambling stocks dominated much of the trading even though the NYSE and Amex have raised margin requirement for trading in the issues.

Ramada Inns was one of the most active NYSE-listed issues. Among the other gaming or related issues in the spotlight were Bally Manufacturing, Caesar's World, Playboy Enterprises, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Hilton Hotels and Holiday Inns.

On the Amex, Resorts International A and B stocks attracted traders. Resorts said it grossed $60 million in its first three months at Atlantic City. Also receiving attention on the Amex were Nortek, Golden Nugget and Showboat Inc.

Firestone Tire & Rubber was one of the most active NYSE-listed issue because of block trades of 200,000 shares at 12¾ and 110,000 and 100,000 shares at 12¾ each on the Midwest Exchange.

Pan American World Airways and National Airlines were active and higher at one time. Pan Am chairman William Seawell predicted the airlines' directors would approve a merger. National has fought a takeover bid by Texas International Airlines.

Among the other airlines, which reported sharply higher August traffic, Delta, Northwest, TWA, Tiger International, Eastern and American all were higher most of the day.

Exxon, which last week said it had found hydrocarbons in the Baltimore Canyon, attracted attention. Exxon said it would have to make further tests to determine the commercial value of the find.

On the Amex, Instrument Systems was active following blocks of 259,000 and 100,000 shares at 1½ each.

Meet Idaho's "Big Labor"

A little-league coach and a charities volunteer

You hear a lot of talk these days about "Big Labor." But when you stop to think about it, Idaho's "Big Labor" is made up of people like Jim Kerns (above) and Orrin Myler (right).

Jim Kerns is President of Local No. 1614 of the Retail Store Employees Union in Boise. Jim spends much of his free time serving the community, coaching little league football and volunteering for the United Fund and Red Cross. A life-long resident of Idaho, Jim is married and has four children.

Orrin Myler, a resident of Ammon, is a member of the Sheet Metal Workers Union in Pocatello. Currently, Orrin is working for his community as a member of the United Fund drive. Orrin and his wife have six children and fifteen grandchildren.

So next time you think of "Big Labor" in Idaho, think of citizens like Jim Kerns and Orrin Myler. They're people who are working for their communities as well as for a living.

Laetrile test inconclusive, institute says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Cancer Institute Wednesday released the results of its first study of cancer patients reportedly helped by Laetrile, but the findings were inconclusive.

The analysis, designed to determine whether full-scale testing of the Laetrile is warranted, evaluated the records of 67 cases submitted in response to a nationwide appeal to doctors for evidence of beneficial response from the substance derived from apricot pits.

According to a report published in the New England Journal of Medicine, a panel of 12 cancer specialists found that six patients whose records were examined showed favorable responses following the Laetrile treatment. But the report said a number of other factors also could have been responsible.

"We cannot dismiss the possibility that the six patients ... responded to Laetrile, but the design of this study in no way allows us to draw this conclusion," three NCI officials said in the report.

"These results allow no definite conclusions supporting the anti-cancer activity of Laetrile."

However, the institute said the review was not designed to determine whether Laetrile was effective against cancer "but merely to determine how much evidence there was suggestive of activity." The NCI had hoped to be able to study 200 to 300 cases.

"It is significant that so few people came forward with case histories of success from Laetrile therapy in view of the claim that thousands of cancer victims have benefitted from the use of this substance," said Donald Kennedy, head of the Food and Drug Administration. "The case review does not establish that any patient has benefitted from Laetrile."

Robert Bradford, president of a pro-Laetrile group called the Committee for Freedom of Choice in Cancer Therapy, said the analysis did not give Laetrile a fair chance because the substance should have been considered in conjunction with a broad metabolic treatment program.

Laetrile proponents claim it is effective in treating cancer, but the cancer institute and the FDA have contended that numerous tests show it is not. The FDA bans Laetrile from interstate commerce, and the safety of Laetrile has been questioned.

Nevertheless, the cancer institute noted that more than 70,000 cancer patients in the United States are believed to be using Laetrile, 17 states have legalized the substance and a federal appeals court has ruled that terminally ill cancer patients can legally buy it in injectable form.

To avoid any possible anti-Laetrile bias on the part of evaluators, the institute included with the Laetrile cases the records of patients treated with conventional anti-cancer drugs.

Results of the analysis will be presented Sept. 25 to an NCI advisory committee. That group will decide whether to recommend clinical tests in which cancer patients receiving Laetrile would be compared with those receiving conventional chemotherapy.

Legislators gird for Gooding maelstrom

By DAVID MORRISSEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Gooding residents Thursday will get what appears to be a final chance to voice opinions on placing a women's prison in their town.

Two public hearings will be held by a legislative interim committee looking into the best use of the former state tuberculosis hospital in Gooding.

The first hearing is at 1 p.m. in the Gooding Courthouse, and the second is at 7 p.m. in the Gooding High School.

According to State Sen. Edith Miller Klein, R-Boise, who chairs the committee, no date has yet been set for publication of its report. But she pointed out the choice of Gooding as a prison site was not yet a final decision.

"I don't think we've exhausted all the possibilities," Klein said. There are at least three other prison site alternatives, she said. "One is the site at Cottonwood, one is at Mountain Home, and then there's always the possibility of the use of a building, or construction of a new building at Boise."

Cottonwood, in north Idaho, is the site of the North Idaho Correctional Institution, which houses 24 minimum security women prisoners. Idaho corrections officials have said it is likely most of those prisoners will eventually be relocated at a women's prison.

Klein pointed out, however, studies of prison sites in Idaho have already been conducted.

"The two committees which investigated this same problem during the last year or two have concluded the site at Gooding would be the most advantageous from the standpoint of facilities available and also from the standpoint of economics," she said.

Klein's interim committee was charged by the 1978 legislature to study the way female offenders are housed and potential alternatives in the state.

But Klein's committee isn't the only group interested in the three building Gooding complex. Following refusal of the 1978 legislature to approve his request for $500,000 to convert the former TB hospital into a women's penitentiary, Gov. John Evans appointed a committee of Gooding residents to study possible uses for the facility.

That 11-member committee, headed by Gooding attorney Andrew James, issued its final report last week. That report recommended the Board of Corrections should be allowed to construct a womens prison at the facility, reserving the east wing of the complex for the alcohol treatment center. Until the facility is actually needed by the state, the present occupants should be permitted to continue using the buildings on a rental basis, the report said.

James pointed out that "only 12 percent" of the space in the Gooding complex is now being used. "There's a tremendous amount of space there," he said. "I think we have space for all of these programs."

Tonight's will be the second round of hearings in Gooding on the prison proposal. Last November a public hearing revealed sharp division of opinion in the town over the prison plan. At the last hearing petitions opposing the prison, containing 400 names, were presented to members of the State Land Board.

Those against the prison in Gooding say opposition to the prison has increased since then.

The former Gooding Tuberculosis Hospital now houses an alcohol treatment center, local kindergartens, senior citizens organizations and the Antique Festival Theater.

Fair could draw 80,000 if weatherman cooperates

By MARJORIE LIERMAN
Times-News writer

FILER — "We're shooting for an all-time high attendance of 80,000 this year and if the weather will cooperate, we will make it," Tom Shouse, Twin Falls County Fair manager, said Wednesday.

In spite of muddy grounds and threatening clouds, Wednesday's attendance may about equal that of last year's, according to Shouse. Last year's first fair day was cold and attendance for the day was cut to 5,079. Attendance last year by 2 p.m. was 1,785, while Wednesday's count at the same time was 1,746.

Last year saw 11,225 people stream through the gates for Twin Falls day, second day of the fair. Today's attendance is expected to equal that. Shouse said workmen were busy all day Wednesday hauling in gravel to make the new entrance off the highway and the parking lot suitable for use.

Dale Williams of Filer received awards for junior champion bull and grand champion bull in Wednesday morning's Holstein show. Lewis Eilers of Kimberly received awards for senior champion cow and grand champion cow.

A blue velvet gown made to be worn at the inaugural ball for President Grover Cleveland won the best of show ribbon in the antique department. The dress belongs to Sigrid Matthews of Kimberly, who said she is the third owner of the dress and sometimes wears it for special occasions. The antique building has some especially fine silver and glass pieces this year, as well as a good variety of all antique collectibles.

A black powder musket loader gun made by John Kidd, 12, of Twin Falls, received the judges' special award in the youth building. Double blue ribbons, given for outstanding exhibits in this department, went to Shannon Jones of Kimberly, for a pioneer cabin display and to Craig Leonard of Filer for a war scene. Room 22 in Bickel Elementary School in Twin Falls also received the double blue ribbons for their fair display made out of seeds.

The home arts department reports fewer quilts and afghans this year but more exhibitors entered different articles, including some very elaborate macrame work. Henry Stiegemeier, 81, of Buhl, won a blue ribbon for a spinning wheel he had made.

In former years some fairgoers have had trouble locating the Tom Parks Pavilion which holds all 4-H displays except livestock. This year they can't miss the building in the southwest corner of the fairgrounds. It has been painted green and white, the 4-H colors, and has several large clover medallions on the sides.

Laura Krepcik of Filer won the grand champion for fitting and showing 4-H horses and Lauri Johnson of Filer received reserve champion.

Today's activities will get underway at 8 a.m. with the polled Hereford show and Quarter Horse halter classes, followed by Quarter Horse working events for adults and youths. Exotic breeds of cattle will be shown at 1 p.m. and the Open-to-the-World steer show is set for 3 p.m.

Youth activities during the day will include 4-H demonstrations, 4-H and FFA round robin, bidding and showing contests and home economics demonstrations.

Pre-rodeo entertainment will begin at 7:30 p.m. with drills by riding clubs and high school bands. The rodeo starts at 8 p.m. sharp.

Arthur and Barbara Baisch of Hazelton enjoyed a treat at the fair Wednesday

Here a chick, there a chick . . .

FILER — City kids who can't tell a duck from a chicken are a rare breed in Magic Valley, but if they exist, a local group wants to educate them.

Children who are not reared on a farm sometimes do not know simple things about common farm animals and the Twin Falls Chapter of the Future Farmers of America has an exhibit at the Twin Falls County Fair to help them learn.

It is the Children's Barnyard. A quick walk through the FFA pavilion at the fair grounds will give any city youngster a crash course in barnyard animals.

Donated for the fair exhibit by local farm youth, there are rabbits of all shapes and sizes, a yellow swarm of baby chicks and a couple of domesticated mallard ducks.

Sheep and goats in one pen are under the watchful eye of Lori Shettler of Twin Falls, an FFA member who helps care for the animals. One baby goat whose mother died recently must be fed by bottle to keep it alive.

The exhibit also includes pigs and turkeys and, for a youngster who perhaps has not been for a drive in the country around Twin Falls, even some calves.

"We have this gathering of animals for kids to look at because there are a lot of city kids that don't know what they look like," Lori explained as she cradled the orphaned baby goat in her arms.

Not even Future Farmers of America is what the name implies anymore. More and more youngsters from city environments are joining the group each year. Now less than 50 percent of FFA members are from a farming background.

Youngsters are taking vocational courses to prepare them for work in agriculture or agricultural support businesses. Students like Lori Shettler are learning how to care for farm animals and how to perform other tasks that play an important part in farming.

And each year at the fair, the youngsters share their experiences with others by sponsoring booths like the Children's Barnyard.

Evans at the fair

TWIN FALLS — Gov. John Evans will visit the Twin Falls County Fair and Rodeo today.

The governor will arrive between 3 and 4 p.m. "and hopes to spend several hours there," enjoying the fair, viewing the exhibits and meeting Magic Valley residents.

Jodie Oser, founder of Short People of America

Short people of the world, unite!

By GARY ELJASSEN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jodie Oser of Cleveland, Ohio, is standing up for her height all across the United States.

The 5-foot, 100-pound special education teacher, faced with what she said was unbearable discrimination because of her size, decided to go out and do something about it.

She formed an organization-of-one called Short People of America last February, and since then has seen the organization grow to 101 members throughout the eastern United States and Canada.

Now, she's traveling across the country stopping at small and large communities to let people know about her aspiring organization.

"I just got tired of the discrimination directed at me because of my height," said Mrs. Oser. "I talked to other people who were having the same problems and decided to do something about it."

To join the group a man must be under 5 feet, 9 inches.

Mrs. Oser began her fight for the rights of short people by doing some research, and one of the first statistics she came across was a 1968 University of Pittsburgh study on income levels of tall and short people.

The study revealed that men in the survey over 6 feet, 2 inches tall made $798 a month compared to $701 for a man under 5 feet 11 inches.

"Researchers said the discrimination was based on height instead of ability," she said. "The taller men were perceived as more intelligent and less intimidating.

Puzzled by this information and feeling some of the negative effects of shortness herself, she launched her organization.

SPOA, in a newsletter it publishes monthly from a Columbus, Ohio, office, cites these examples of discrimination against short people: peep holes for safety purposes in doors are too high; shelves in grocery stores are hard to reach; railings in buses are placed at the inconvenience of shorter people; theater seats are placed in such a way that short people can't see as well as tall people; and elevator buttons are too high.

Another example is the fact that since 1921 there have only been two Miss Americas who are under 5 feet, 6 inches.

More important, said Mrs. Oser, than some of these discriminatory physical practices is the "attitude" which prevails in the U.S.

"Studies show that people equate height with competence," she said.

In addition, she said "short" is always used in the negative context like short end of the stick, shortcomings, pint-sized, shortchanged, and short ear.

Mrs. Oser hopes by traveling throughout the country she can educate people about some of these discriminatory practices. She and her husband are financing the two-month trip.

"I'm not advocating a complete redesigning of buildings," she commented, "but I just want people to now what we go through every day."

Those who want more information about the organization should contact SPOA, P.O. Box 09185, Columbus, Ohio 43209. Membership costs $5.

SIRAA over the top in Twin Falls

By RAY SULLIVAN
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The 1,200 petition signatures needed in Twin Falls County to get the regional airport question on the fall election ballot have been obtained, according to a leader of a group favoring a new airport.

Dr. James Taylor, College of Southern Idaho president, said Wednesday morning, "I would imagine we would have adequate signatures to turn in" to the county clerk's office for verification.

Taylor said many of the signatures were gathered in the last six weeks in a dozen breakfast meetings hosted by 25 members of a local committee favoring the county joining the Southern Idaho Regional Airport Authority's in building a new $32 million regional airport in Jerome County.

The plan to join SIRAA was defeated six years ago by county voters because a new airport would mean replacing Twin Falls city-county airport, Joslin Field, as the key airport in the Magic Valley.

Taylor said extra signatures will be obtained the rest of this week to ensure the necessary five percent of registered county voters have signed the petitions.

The petition drive is being conducted in Blaine County and in SIRAA's five existing counties — Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln, Minidoka and Cassia — to determine whether Blaine or Twin Falls counties should join SIRAA.

SIRAA officials admit that a new regional airport is not economically feasible without at least one of those two counties participating.

Petitions have been filed and are being checked in Jerome and Lincoln counties so far. Pete Snow, SIRAA lawyer, said they were trying to wind up the petition drive in Minidoka County Tuesday and a "few more signatures" are still needed in Cassia County. Gooding and Blaine counties also are said to be close to reaching their goals, SIRAA backers report.

Castleford milk man escapes electrocution

BUHL — A Castleford man escaped death in a near electrocution Wednesday morning when a pump motor on a bulk milk truck he was operating shorted out.

Twin Falls county sheriff's officers said Tom Hensen, 26, was driving a milk truck and had stopped at the William Eldredge farm about two miles east and a quarter mile north of Buhl to pick up milk.

Deputies said the man was pumping milk into the truck when the motor on the pump malfunctioned, making an electrical contact with the truck.

As Hensen went to open the truck door he was knocked to the ground and suffered electrical shock and burns of the hands.

Mr. and Mrs. Eldredge found him lying on the ground near the truck and called officers.

The accident was reported about 10:45 a.m. Officers said Hensen received an electrical jolt of about 310 volts. Hensen was being treated at Magic Valley Memorial Hospital where he was reported in fair condition Wednesday afternoon. Deputies said they had not been able to question Hensen fully Wednesday because of his condition.

Top dog a coyote killing breed

TWIN FALLS — Marumac Ajax of Roanoke was top dog at the Twin Falls County Fair Wednesday.

Ajax, as owner Larry Johnson of Buhl calls him, is a 150-pound Irish wolfhound from the Isle of Wight in England.

Marumac Ajax and his owner Larry Johnson of Buhl

Because of his fine line of breeding Ajax walked off smartly with the "Best of Show" trophy and purple ribbon in the dog competition at the Filer Fairgrounds this year.

He won over a field of six first prize winners in other classes, including Doberman pincers and miniature collies. Ajax also won a blue ribbon in the hound category where he outclassed two other purebred dogs.

Johnson said he purchased Ajax from a purebred breeder in England while serving a tour of duty with the U.S. Air Force. He said Irish wolfhound puppies bring about 150 English pounds.

The big grey dogs were originally bred to kill wolves in Ireland, Johnson explained. For that reason, they make good coyote killers and are rapidly becoming popular with sheepmen in this country.

They are bigger and faster than a coyote and outlast the smaller wild dogs in a chase because of their great stamina. Sheepmen in this country are buying them as puppies and raising them around with sheep to instill the bounds with a protective spirit.

"They are mainly a sight dog," Johnson explained. "If they see a coyote they'll kill it. I had some problems with calves for awhile."

Johnson purchased Ajax in 1975 when he was six months old. He also purchased a female wolfhound from the same mother several generations later. He plans to open a kennel at his home near Buhl and offer the first litter from the female for sale at $300 each.

Dogs entered in this year's show did not require training to win ribbons, according to Johnson. The judge based his decision on quality alone.

"Mainly, if you have a good dog, you can win," Johnson said.

Whitwell criticizes county salary gap

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Salaries for Twin Falls County employees brought objections in a public hearing Tuesday on the prooposed $15.6 million 1979 county budget.

But the objection, which came from a former county clerk, was because the salaries are generally too low.

All department budgets were reviewed with those attending the hearing questioning the county fair costs, hospital budget fitures, weed eradication and several other county services. County commissioners will continue to receive public comments through the end of the week.

Gary Whitwell, who served briefly as Twin Falls county clerk during the past year, questioned commissioners about the high turn over of workers because of low salaries. He charged the cost of training new help creates a "false" economy. Whitwell said the average county worker salary is $550 per month.

But the former county official took exception to one salary request. He said one employee in the Volunteers in Correction program is scheduled to receive a $12,500 salary in the coming year. She came to work for the county at a salary of $5,000 in 1977 with an increase to $10,500 in 1978, and requested $12,500 for the coming year, Whitwell said.

"When you compare this to the salaries of some of the long-time county employees and the average county employee at less than half that figure, it raises a question," Whitwell told the county commissioners.

Merl Leonard, commission chairman, said magistrate court judges recommended that salary on the basis of what they felt the position is worth. He said the Volunteers in Correction provide a valuable service to the court in handling juvenile cases by rehabilitating juveniles and providing low cost foster home care. Leonard said the state-mandated care the county must provide for juveniles is cheaper through the volunteers program than through regular institutional care.

"We aren't comparing county salaries here," he told Whitwell. "We are comparing her salary to that of a state social worker and you know what they make."

Although no names were mentioned, the objection was for the salary of Marjorie Hoops, head of the Volunteers in Correction program for the county.

Other county employees received an average $45 per month salary increases this year. Each department received a budget increase equal to $45 per month per employe with the department head to decide if it will be divided evenly or if those with longer tenure and more responsibility should receive a larger share of the amount.

Both Bobert Kulik, Filer, and Whitwell urged the county fair board members to increase the $1 admission to the annual display to at least $1.50 to help pay for some of the needs of the fair grounds and make the facility more self sustaining.

Stanley Snow, fair board member, said the board wants to retain the $1 admission and has instead increased concessioner fees and other charges in an effort to keep the fair a family event that all county residents can afford. He said the fair grounds budget request of $261,613 will require only $82,000 from tax levies. The rest, he said, is generated by gate and concession fees.

Kulik said taxpayers should not have to subsidize the fair. He said if the revenue does not cover costs the board should look to increasing fees, not taxes.

"This is a luxury. It's entertainment. I don't think the taxpayers as a whole should have to pay for it," Kulik said.

Snow said an increase in the gate admission would require a recommendation from the fairboard and final approval from the county commissioners. Snow said the board will make such a recommendation if county residents request it.

Weed department director Wallace Savage was asked why a farmer can often buy chemicals from private firms at rates below what the county charges.

Savage said the county is required by law to call for bids and to base fees on those bid figures. He said large firms can undersell the county because they make it up on large volume.

Magic Valley Memorial Hospital administrator James Rosenbaum was asked how much revenue sharing money will be used for remodeling work at the hospital.

Rosenbaum said all of the hospital's $75,000 in revenue sharing money is earmarked for converting an old nurses home office space. He said this willsave save the hospital money in rental costs of outside office space and will centralize hospital departments.

Rosenbaum denied the money will be used for construction programs turned down in bond issue elections.

He said the upcoming $8 million hospital improvement program will be financed through the Idaho Health Facilities Act which enables hospitals to issue tax free revenue bonds against anticipated revenue.

Of the $11 million hospital budget, the administrator said, only $215,000 comes from the tax levies. The remainder is from hospital income. Rosenbaum said the largest tems in the hospital budget are the building improvement program and staff salaries. He said the county tax money is for upkeep and maintenance of the building.

Darrell Helder, director of solid waste disposal, said many of the rising costs in his department are the result of new state and federal regulations.

Ed Woods, zoning administrator, said he has advised the county commmission to hire a county engineer.

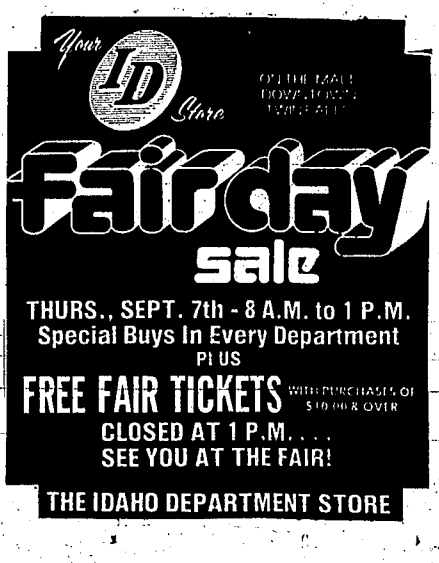
"I think it is time the county began coordinating services such as water and sewer in the small towns in a unified county plan. An engineer will be needed to do this," Woods said.

He icluded $18,000 for engineer's salary in his budget.

County Clerk Richard Pence said both the primary and general election costs were included in last year's budget, but because of the split in the new fiscal year, the the general will be funded in the 1979 budget. Cost of that election will be transfered directly into the new budget.

Cloyce Edwards, county Civil Defense director, said his $3,000 budget will be used for training and maintenance and testing of equipment. He said most county directors receive a $200 a month salary but he is a volunteer.

Public Defender Golden Bennett said he needs an additional $20,000 this year although he signed a two-year $46,000-a-year contract last year. He said the work load from the courts is increasing more than he anticipated when he bid for the services a year ago.



Jerome to spend $3.3 million in 1978-79

By LONNIE ROSENWALD
Times-News writer

JEROME — Jerome's new $3.3 million budget includes $1.7 million for a new sewage treatment plant, increased funds for public works and an 6 percent employee wage increase.

Other major items added to the budget are $76,000 for renovating the old railroad depot and $9,000 to a hire another fireman.

Despite the completion of last year's expensive land acquisition program for the new sewage treatment plant and some corner-cutting on costs, the budget is up three percent this year.

This figure was obtained by subtracting federal and state funds for the sewage plant from the 1978 and 1979 budgets.

However, taxes won't go up, as the added revenue will be collected from new taxpayers.

The city expects $8,000 less in Federal Revenue Sharing funds this year. Revenue sharing funds are based on population and income levels.

The three percent increase is largely due to $192,000 in extra public works costs for sewer, irrigation, highway and water departments. Public Works director Ed Evans said the additional money is for more construction and reconstruction of existing roads, and the purchase two trucks whose $30,000 cost will be paid by Revenue Sharing funds.

But the bulk of the public works increase comes from an addition of $138,000 in contigency funds to the sewer, water, irrigation and highway departments, which Evans said were added in case the one percent initiative passes.

Contingency funds for all city departments increased by $172,924.

"If the initiative doesn't pass these funds will carry over to following year," explained Mayor Marshall Everheart. He said this should make a mil levy reduction in 1980 possible.

Everheart explained many of the contingencies represent revenue surpluses from service rates that the city can't lower. For example, a surplus in water occured because the city "didn't get much done in expanding the water system this year," but water rates can only be changed with permission from holders of city water bonds.

He said the $76,000 contingency item in the sewer budget will be used to pay the city's share in an interceptor system to connect the new plant to existing sewage pipes. Federal and state grants must be approved before that project begins.

City workers were given seven to nine percent salary increases beginning Oct.1, depending on job titles and seniority. The increase follows a $50 across-the-board raise given to city workers last May.

The budget includes a $76,000 federal grant the city has applied for to convert the old railroad depot into a community center. Last spring the 65-year-old depot was moved to the First Avenue Park.

Fire Chief Lynn Bingham has asked the city to increase its firefighting staff for the first time in 30 years. He said he will use the extra man to relieve three current fireman who are working between 72 and 96 hours a week.

Other personnel will be added in the sewer department to get ready for the new plant which will be built next year.

Savings in the budget were achieved in the Parks department which saved over $6,000 by getting the Jerome Recreation district and federal funds to pay for a swimming pool attendant. The animal shelter also budgeted a lower salary figure because it lost a CETA position.

Idaho colleges evaluate possible budget cuts

BOISE (UPI) — Boise State University should be reduced to a junior college in the event there is a 30 percent proposed budget reduction if the 1 percent property tax initiative is adopted in November.

This was revealed Wednesday in alternative budgets released by the Office of the State Board of Education for the state's institutions of higher education.

Gov. John V. Evans had requested state agencies to provide proposed budgets which would reflect up to 30 percent less money than they received this year.The governor said this would give him "planning tools" to determine what changes, if any, were needed to provide property tax relief.

Evans also ordered the state agencies to release the alternative budgets as public information.

In releasing the alternative education budgets, Leno D. Seppi, president of the State Board of Education, emphasized the materials were prepared at the request of Evans and board members had not had an opportunity to review the reduced budget options.

He said the board will review the information and consider the options at its meeting Oct. 7-8 in Moscow.

"Thus any comment at this time regarding these hastily-done reduction plans would be premature," Seppi said.

He said, however, the materials "do not represent the board's proposals for reducing its programs. The information simply is submitted in response to the governor's need to obtain data on the possible impact of a severe reduction in state revenues. The board does not anticipate that these proposed reductions will have to be made."

The board is preparing for the possibility that state support for public education will be reduced if the property tax initiative is approved, he added.

Seppi said until Evans has a chance to study the information and until members of the board have an opportunity to evaluate the materials, "any conclusions would be premature."

A 30 percent reduction would mean the Boise State budget would be cut $6.4 million.

"Should the school sustain a cut of this magnitude, it should become a junior college," the school said in a summary of its reduced budget proposal.

BSU said that "buildings wold be closed" and there would be "no general advising or counseling at all for students at this level."

At Idaho State, the reduction would amount to more than $7 million with a reduction in full-time employes of 255.

"At this level of cut faculty morale would be very low, and a movement to unionize would probably become irresistible," the school said. "Also, the loss of reduction of academic programs would result in enrollment declines."

The University of Idaho budget would be reduced $3.3 million and a summation of the cuts said, "Many departments, perhaps entire colleges, would have to be eliminated to make the necessary cuts."

"Since a number of the programs offered by the University of Idaho are unique in the state, those students wishing those progrms would have to seek them at other places throughout the nation."

The reduction would cut Lewis-Clark State College at Lewiston a total of $1,191,200.

'Power to the states,' Reagan tells Idaho GOP

BOISE (UPI) — Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan said Wednesday the Constitution was not meant to give the federal government the power it has over individual states.

He said that the federal government was usurping the powers of the states and that Republican candidates must be elected in the forthcoming congressional elections who want to take this power away from the federal level and return it to the states.

Reagan was in Idaho campaigning on behalf of the state's Republican congressional candidates.

His arrival for a Boise appearance was delayed for nearly an hour. He finally arrived at a Boise news conference with Sen. James McClure, who he said should be returned to Congress next year because the senator had been on the "right side" of legislation which would give the states their rightful power.

McClure told the news conference the states were capable of solving most of their own problems.

"The government is part of the problem instead of the solution," McClure said.

The Idaho Republican called for the election of people who want to return the power to the states, adding that the taxpayer revolt was a good example that the federal government should play a more limited role.

Reagan also endorsed the candidacy of Republican Allan Larsen of Blackfoot for governor, saying that there should be strong GOP governors who will fight for less federal government and return it to the states.

He did not close the door on the possibility of his candidacy for president, but said it was still too early to test the waters. He said this could wait until after the 1978 elections.

Reagan said he was in Idaho to campaign for Republican candidates and that any decision about the presidency would have to wait until the elections were over.

A final declaration will come as to whether he will be a candidate, Reagan said, when it is most advantagous.

He also said he did not see anything wrong with the U.S. being involved in peace talks in the Mid-East. He said it was beneficial to keep the talks going, but "whether anything comes of this, I don't know. I hope some progress will come from them."

City workers can make suggestions anonymously

TWIN FALLS — City Manager Jean Milar has apparently decided he wants to know what his employees have to say, no matter what it is.

To accomplish that end, Milar has set up three suggestion boxes at locations which are accessible to city employees and which also protect their anonymity, and he has encouraged city employees to use them.

Currently, city employees can only express suggestions or complaints directly to their superiors or to Milar himself.

The suggestion boxes, suggested in a recent efficiency study of the city government performed for the city council, will offer anonymity which does not now exist.

One box has been placed in the alley behind City Hall, one in the city work yard, and one at the wastewater treatment plant.

The council has already placed its stamp of approval on the boxes, but has not specifically ordered the city manager to implement such a program, according to Councilman Chris Talkington.

Talkington said the council, in a meeting with Milar, supported the use of the boxes to gain "more frank, straightforward input" from city employees, while guaranteeing them anonymity.

Milar observed that "it remains to be seen" whether the boxes will result in more employee suggestions and complaints regarding city administration than have been received in the past.

Specht's steer wins grand champion award

FILER — Eighteen months of feeding, grooming and caring for his young steer paid off Wednesday afternoon for Craig Specht, 14, of Twin Falls.

Young Specht's steer won grand champion in his class at the 4-H judging at the Filer Fairgrounds.

Along with other animals raised and groomed for the contest, Specht's 18-month-old steer will go on sale Friday at the 4-H fat stock sale. Local ranchers and businessmen support the sale each year by purchasing animals raised as 4-H projects by local youngsters.

Fed on oats, grain, beet pulp and some hay, Specht's winning steer tipped the scales at 1,115 pounds and won grand champion because of "high cuttability," according to the judge.

The official said he chose Specht's animal because of its high lean-to-fat ratio and firm feel. The animal had a well-muscled hind quarter, he explained.

Specht lined up with other 4-Hers holding a stick with hook on the end to help get his steer to stand well and get its feet in position while waiting for the judge's opinion.

He said the most difficult task in raising the steer for this year's contest was feeding. He also had to practice combing it and curling its hair to make a good impression for the show.

Kerry Satterwhite of Hamer fluff dries tail of bull at fair

Charles Kozol/Times-News

A potential winner gets the treatment

FILER — Kerry Satterwhite was using her hair drier Tuesday at the Filer fairgrounds to fluff up the tail of a prize polled Hereford bull.

Satterwhite, of the LZ Ranch in Hamer, Idaho, was at the Twin Falls County Fair this week sprucing up the bull for judging this morning in the junior bull calf class.

The 11-month-old champion bull has already won two contests at fairs in Mud Lake and Rexburg, according to LZ partner Tony Bailey. Bailey brought the purebred animal to Twin Falls with high hopes for another win.

To win a fair contest, it helps to have good lineage. As yet unnamed, Bailey's bull is the grandson of a famous sire called Advancer from the famous Wooden Shoe Ranch in Washington state.

He has all the earmarks of fine parentage. Bailey said judges look for a long, lean frame on prize-winning cattle.

"They want them to be tall, now," Bailey explained. "They don't want them short and blocky any more like they used to."

Judges look for characteristics which promise good beef production, he added. A wide back with little back fat promises good rib eyes and a lean, meaty fame means quality cuts of beef.

Bailey travels with several bulls from the LZ Ranch to vie for ribbons because a bull which wins prizes at county fairs can be more valuable when sale time comes around.

Bailey said his young bull would probably be ready for sale as a breeder by the time he reaches two years of age.

He could bring a price as high as $1,200 with feathers in his cap from county fairs around the state.

YOUR CHANCE TO HAVE A SAY ABOUT ELECTRIC POWER RATES

We invite you to comment on BPA's proposed power rate increase.

We do not sell power directly to you, of course. We sell power only at wholesale. Most of the power we sell goes to the utilities which in turn sell to individual consumers. We also sell power directly to industries, and some to other government agencies.

Impacts on the Consumer

Wholesale power represents only part of the costs of utilities. So if we nearly double our rates, as we must to meet our obligations, it will not mean a doubling of your rates. But your utility probably will have to raise its rates to absorb the increased cost of BPA wholesale power. Some utilities get all their power from us, and some very little.

What You Say Counts

We're required by law to charge rates that pay all our costs. We know how much additional revenues we must have. But there are many ways to spread the increase other than straight across the board. For example, we have looked at rates based on the actual cost of service, new generation costs, environmental impacts, and both time-of-day and seasonal use.

We'd like you to come in and hear our explanation of the options and our tentative proposal. Pick the time and place listed below which are most convenient to you. Please come and ask questions. We'll be back in November to hold another round of meetings called Public Comment Forums. That's when you can give us your specific comments as to our preliminary proposal.

Wyoming drug roundup nets 13 suspects

GREEN RIVER, Wyo. (UPI) — Authorities said at least 13 persons were arrested Wednesday in an early-morning roundup of drug-trafficking suspects charged in state grand jury indictments of 21 persons in Colorado and Wyoming.

Deputy County Attorney Robert J. Picket of Sweetwater County said arrests were made in Denver and in the Wyoming communities of Laramie, Casper and Rock Springs.

Three warrants were sent to the sheriff's office in Laramie, but only two arrests were made after Sheriff Don Fritzen's deputies determined the third man had left town. Otherwise, there were four arrests in Casper, four in Rock Srings and three in Denver.

Picket said 14 persons had been arrested, but his figure included the third man in Laramie, who had not yet been apprehended.

"I think I know where he is," Picket said. "And he's still in the state. This is sort of tough, you know. They bounce around."

The two arrested in Laramie were identified as Danny Lee Graham, 35, and Robert Paul Romero, 31, both of Laramie. They were being held in the Albany County Jail.

Picket said the charges on the indictments handed down by the grand jury Friday are all drug-related. "They range from heroin, cocaine and marijuana to amphetamines," he said. "Some deal with two, some deal with three (drug charges)."

A bond hearing for the four defendants held in the Sweetwater County Jail is scheduled Wednesday afternoon, to be presided over by Court Commissioner Ford Bussart.

"We were working on this all yesterday, getting the paperwork ready" Picket said. "We contacted these various departments (law enforcement agencies) in these other towns and coordinated the entire effort. Everybody moved at the same time."

"These indictments do not involve any public officer or any police officer," Sweetwater County District Judge Kenneth Hamm said Tuesday.

Strike in Wyoming may cut off power

ROCK SPRINGS, WYO. (UPI) — Miners, saying they were "tired of the baloney that has been handed to us," have staged a wildcat strike at a strip mine that supplies coal to a major power plant.

All 280 members of the Progressive Mine Workers Union of America Local No. 1978 at Bridger Coal Co.'s mine 35 miles east of Rock Springs walked out Tuesday. Pickets kept all but management personnel out of the mine.

The strike came one day before a vote was to be held on a new contract proposed by the company. Although balloting still will go on, Don Jacobson, union local vice president, held out little hope of approval. "It looks like they sent their own contract down the drain," he said.

Union and management met Tuesday evening, but the only agreement was to meet again — at 9 a.m. Wednesday, Jacobson said.

The strikers had been working without a contract since March, and last week the company proposed the agreement, which it said provided increases in wages and cost of living benefits.

On Sunday, the company — which supplies coal to Pacific Power and Light Co.'s Jim Bridger Power Plant near Rock Springs — brought in a PP&L worker to haul ash, Jacobson said. Union members were infuriated because one of their men was short on overtime.

"That is the fuse that lit the stick of dynamite," Jacobson said.

"Basically, we're tired of the baloney that has been handed to us."

Asked Tuesday evening if a quick agreement was possible, Jacobson said, "I don't know."

"They have not agreed to settle the eight hours pay of the man who was due overtime. They said they were at fault and as soon as we got a contract this is the first grievance they would look at. Our people feel it should be handled now."

Jacobson has accused Larry Tabaka, Bridger Coal general manager, of refusing to bargain in good faith, trying to break the union, and attempting to operate the mine with management personnel.

Church opposes U.S. troops on West Bank

BOISE (UPI) — Sen. Frank Church says he's "unalterably opposed" to stationing American troops on the West Bank of the Jordan River, even as part of a formal peace agreement between Egypt and Israel.

Appearing on the KTVB television interview program, "Viewpoint," Tuesday, the ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee said he has made his opposition clear to Zbigniew Brzezinski, the president's security adviser.

"Under no circumstances should American troops be used to keep the peace," Church said.

Meantime, Church said he believes the Carter administration eventually must change its opposition to breeder reactor projects.

While everyone should be concerned about proliferation of nuclear weapons through plutonium created by such reactors, he said, construction of reactors by Germany, France and other nations means the United States must find some other means of coping with proliferation.

On other subjects, Church said:

•He likely will become chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in January and has no intention of running for president in 1980. He said he believes Carter will seek re-election.

•He still is opposed to national health insurance but favors development of an adequate, comprehensive program for the elderly and using it as a laboratory.

•He hopes the RARE II (Roadless Area Review and Evaluation) recommendation will include as little additional study area as possible.

Leroy denies report he'll quit Evans staff

BOISE (UPI) — Steve Leroy has denied rumors that he soon may leave the staff of Gov. John V. Evans to join a congressional staff.

Leroy, press secretary since Evans succeeded Cecil D. Andrus as governor in January of 1977, said, flatly, "I'm not leaving" when asked about such reports circulating about the capitol.

"There are no plans for me to leave this office either on my own or at the governor's bidding," he said. "I may die here."

Fresh round of talks for Frontier, union

DENVER (UPI) — Frontier Airlines and its mechanics union have agreed to resume negotiations Saturday in a final attempt to avert a strike that could start as soon as Sept. 16.

A 30-day "cooling off" period expires on that date, and members of the International Association of Machinists already have authorized their leaders to call a strike if there is no progress in contract negotiations.

Frontier's 700 mechanics have been working without a contract since last October. A tentative agreement negotiated by union leaders and the company narrowly was rejected last June after it was learned the company was offering other employees better vacation terms.

Federal mediator Harry Bickford earlier summoned both sides to a meeting in Miami next Tuesday, but there will be no need for that session if the Denver talks this weekend prove successful.

Frontier spokesman Bob Burns said it was company policy not to disclose the specific issues that divide the two sides, but he said management "remains very hopeful a settlement can be reached."

The "cooling off" period began when both sides turned down a federal offer of binding arbitration in mid-August.

Echoes in Arizona campaign

PHOENIX (UPI) — There's a familiar ring to the campaigns waged by the three Republicans and one of the two Democrats seeking the governor's office and there's good reason for it.

Republicans Ev Mecham, Jack Londen and Charles King and Democrat Dave Moss all conceded that incumbent Gov. Bruce Babbitt was the easy front-runner for the Democratic nomination.

But each of the four candidates believed Babbitt was beatable and each believed he would win his party's nomination in Tuesday's primary election.

So strong was their self-confidence that the Republican candidates agreed informally not to criticize each other during the primary campaign and instead focus attention on Babbitt.

"We didn't get together in a backroom or anything like that — we just did it," says Mecham, a Glendale automobile dealer. "We wanted to remain friends, we wanted to stay together. We never attacked each other in any way. It was a sensible agreement."

Londen, a millionaire Phoenix insurance man, says his primary election campaign was "concentrated entirely on running against Bruce Babbitt."

"For quite some time, our polls have shown that we are going to win the primary and because I happen to be good friends with Ev and Charles King, and because our philosophies are similar, we did not go after each other," says Londen.

While not conceding the existence of an informal agreement, King describes the campaigns run by himself, Mecham and Londen as "positive campaigns offering solutions rather than just raising questions."

Rather than attack each other during the campaign, each of the Republican candidates pointed out to all who would listen why he felt he was particularly suited for the office and why Babbitt was not.

The Republican stragedy produced a rather lackluster campaign — outright dull in the opinion of some political observers. In Moss' view, the Republican "togetherness" both aided and hindered his campaign.

"They're helping me but I don't think they're helping themsleves," says Moss. "They're letting it slide by forgetting their own primary. I think they're doing the wrong thing but I like it, that's for doggone sure."

With Babbitt's seeming reluctance to campaign, Moss often appeared at speaking engagements with the Republican contenders. With the theme of all four being an attack on Babbitt a few eyebrows were raised, Moss says.

"By Babbitt being absent at about 140 speaking engagements, he has thrown me in with the Republicans," says Moss, part owner of the Tortilla Flat tourist attract near Canyon Lake.

Fred DuVal, Babbitt's campaign director, describes Babbitt's primary campaign as "low key and organizational."

"That means the basic emphasis is to stress the successes of Bruce's incumbency as attorney general (he served in that post until last March when he became governor upon the death of Gov. Wesley Bolin) and as governor," says DuVal. "As a result, the campaign has not caused all kinds of political thunder but has stressed that Bruce is a working governor who is getting the job done."

DuVal says Babbitt did not have time to handle the day-to-day chores of the governor's office and campaign at the same time. He had to skip a number of smaller speaking engagements which attracted the other candidates.

"The governor is not complacent," DuVal says. "His first responsibility to the voters is to do a good job and if he does a good job, the election will take care of itself. That does not mean we will not campaign aggressively (for the November general election) because we will. It does mean that executing the duties of the office of governor will always come first."

What led to the agreement among the Republican candidates were somewhat similar ideologies that would allow the two losers to support the winner, even though each believed he would be the GOP standard bearer.

Texans' camp gear sparks new search

CORTEZ, Colo. (UPI) — The discovery of camping gear belonging to a Texas couple missing nearly a month and believed dead led Wednesday to a search for their bodies in southeast Colorado near Dolores, said sheriff's officers.

Sgt. Dean Stevenson of the Montezuma County sheriff's office said gear belonging to James Judge, 26, and his wife, Jeanette Margene, 24, both of Amarillo, Texas, was found Tuesday at a picnic site on private land about 18 miles northeast of Cortez.

Stevenson said the items included camping gear, some food and clothing.

"I can't tell you how we traced it, but what we found was positively identified," he said.

The couple has been missing since Aug. 8 when they called relatives from a telephone booth in South Fork, Colo., about 140 miles west of Cortez. The Judges, who were on a honeymoon camping trip, were believed killed by two convicted murderers from the Arizona State Prison and three accomplices.

The fugitives tried to crash a police roadblock in Casa Grande, Ariz., Aug. 11. All the fugitives were captured, except for Gary Tison, 42, who died after fleeing into the Arizona desert, and his son, Donald, 20, who was slain by police.

The Rio Grande County sheriff's office in Del Norte conducted a ground and air search of the region around South Fork earlier this month, but found no trace of the missing couple.

Stevenson said sheriff's deputies and volunteers searched in the vicinity of the picnic site in Montezuma County Tuesday for some trace of the couple. He said 70-100 searchers would spread out from the picnic site Wednesday and continue looking for clues.

Nevada Republican charges church supports candidates

RENO (UPI) — William "Bill" Boyd, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, said Wednesday the Mormon Church is endorsing and financially supporting two Mormons who are candidates for the office.

He said tax-exempt church corporate dollars are financing Republican DeVoe Heaton and Democrat Myron Leavitt, that the Democratic Party is being "infiltrated" with Mormons, and that Mormons are trying to gain control of 13 western states for philosophical reasons.

He called for an investigation of his allegations that possible monies are involved, aside from church endorsements. He said he was taking his request to the attorney general, Clark County assessor, and the Internal Revenue Service.

Boyd said he learned the 40th Ward Church in Las Vegas had a flyer with a stuffer endorsing candidates. He said it was a "blatant violation" of separation of church and state.

Boyd listed campaign contributions of about $9,500 and called upon other candidates for the office to issue statements of their contributions. He said he was aiming his request specifically at Heaton and Leavitt.

"I believe it is necessary for the voters to know now if candidates for the office are receiving funds from any individual or group which would place the beneficiary in a conflict of interest. I think it is also very important that these statements include any contributions from Mormon Church affiliates or members of the church," he said.

"Heaton particularly is making a more than blatant attempt to secure Mormon support through campaign literature. That is all well and good, but the voters have the right to know if the influence of that religious body is being extended to the level of direct contributions," he said.

Medics reattach arm

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Surgeons have rejoined the nearly severed arm of a water skier whose towline was fouled by a boat propeller on Clear Lake, 80 miles north of San Francisco.

A spokesman at Ralph K. Davies Medical Center said Darlene Serpa, 25, Clear Lake Highlands, was "looking very good and the surgeons are very hopeful" following Sunday's eight-hour operation.

Mrs. Serpa was skiing Saturday behind a boat driven by her husband when a fisherman apparently became upset, saying the skiing was interfering with his fishing.

He drove his boat across the towline and it became entangled in the propeller and wrapped around Mrs. Serpa's arm. Her wrist was broken and the arm was torn below the elbow.

Daniel Keese, 34, of South San Francisco, was charged with assault with a deadly weapon and released on $2,500 bail.

Student fee increase at U of I draws fire

MOSCOW (UPI) — A proposed $29 increase in student fees was opposed by most of the witnesses attending a hearing on the University of Idaho campus Tuesday.

The increase is scheduled to go into effect in the fall of 1979 if approved by the school's Board of Regents.

The board is expected to consider the increase at its regular meeting this week in Boise.

The students now pay a fee of $219, down $1 from last spring. The increase would boost the total to $248 per semester.

What's Bedard doing here?

He's on the Golden Eagle basketball team after playing last year on Notre Dame football team

TWIN FALLS — Sitting in CSI Coach Mike Mitchell's office and listening to the coach call off the names of the new players that soon will be playing some full court basketball as they prepare for the long season ahead.

"Quinn Hepworth from Minico, Jim Grigsby from Boise, Karl Emerson from Jerome, Kipp Bedard from Boise..."

"Kip, who?" and your head swivels up.

"Kipp Bedard."

"The Kipp Bedard from Capital. What's he doing...Oh yeah, I heard he was leaving Notre Dame, but what's he doing here?"

"Playing basketball," Mitchell replies.

About then you see the auburn-tinted Afro and, yep, it's the same Kipp Bedard.

Bedard was everyone's all-everything his senior year at Capital high school. He was all conference defensive back as a junior and all SIC defensive back and flanker as a senior. He played two years during the Capital domination of the state A-1 basketball championships.

When it came time for the SIC coaches to select their football team his senior season, Coach Tom Swindell of Capital ran down the stats on Bedard and then said "we believe he is the best athlete in the state." And no one bothered to do much more than nod.

Therefore it was always assumed that Bedard's athletic future could be found on the gridiron.

The youngster has no problem asnwering the question.

"There is more to life than studying and football," he says. "At Notre Dame you go to practice at two o'clock, workout for two or three hours, then go in and look at film and then study the opposition. By the time you're back in your room is seven to eight o'clock and then you'd better start studying."

"It doesn't leave you any time for getting out and seeing the town, taking a weekend vacation once in a while or even getting acquainted around the campus. I just said to heck with it and left."

It wasn't that Bedard hadn't had some success. He'd run second team flanker on the varsity, seeing limited action. He was one of the 64 selected to suit up for last year's bowl-dominating Cotton Bowl but he didn't get into the game.

He was a 17-year-old playing football for Notre Dame, not a precedent setter but surely an attention getter.

"If I had gone back, I probably would have played quite a bit this year," he says. "There would only be one returning, a senior, and then it would have been just me and maybe some freshmen they'd brought in," he reports.

CSI basketball fans, however, shouldn't be any more surprised to see Bedard here than Bedard is to find himself here.

"I had pretty much decided to transfer back to Boise State, sit my year out and then play my last three years of football there. No," he answered a question, "coming to CSI wasn't my idea. I think probably (Boise State) Coach (Jim) Criner had the most to do with that."

"That's right," Coach Mitchell said. "Coach Criner called me and asked if I would be interested in getting a good basketball player down here. I told him I was always interested in that."

Bedard negates such talk. "I don't expect that I'll play much for this team," he smiles, pointing out to 10 Golden Eagles scrimmaging. "But I've always liked to play basketball and basketball helps my football because it keeps me in good condition and improves your reactions and quickness."

To which Coach Mitchell riposted, "If the guy's a competitor, I can always find some floor time for him."

Overall Bedard counts it a very happy happenstance. He had resigned himself to a year of sitting on the sidelines and getting into nothing more competitive than a campus frisbee game. This way he can stay in organized competition, play a college sport and still have three years of NCAA football eligibility left.

When Bedard came out of Capital there was a long line of football coaches waiting to talk to him. He visited Kansas, Washington, Stanford, Notre Dame, Colorado and then opted for Notre Dame.

His decision to leave Notre Dame had nothing to do with his considering himself to have made a bad decision or that Notre Dame had slighted him in any way. "They treated me well. They treated us very well. The people at the (Cotton) bowl really treated us well."

"I wasn't disillusioned with (big time) football," Bedard continues. "No, it wasn't one of my childhood dreams to grow up and play for Notre Dame. They used to play on TV on Sunday mornings (the Notre Dame 24-hour late playback) and I used to watch them. I never dreamed I'd have a chance to play there."

"But after I found out about how football and study use up all your time, I knew this wasn't what I wanted. I have no desire to stay in the game after college. No, I don't want to play professional football," he said.

What is that future then?

"I don't know. Just maybe go camping," Bedard laughs.

It's basketball but weights are still important

Traditional battles highlight slate

MAGIC VALLEY — Minico swings into the Southern Idaho Conference season while arch rivals Declo-Raft River, Murtaugh-Kimberly and Valley-Hansen battle it out for prestige to highlight the second weekend of Magic Valley's football season.

Minico will be traveling to Bonneville, the game providing a yardstick of sorts for the Mini-Cassia squabble between the Spartans and Burley at year's end. Bonneville dropped Burley last week. However, with that major game still two months off, the Friday contest will be at best an early indicator.

Minico's work appears cut out for it. The Spartans are pegging a lot of their hopes for success on juniors and the game experience hasn't come around as yet. Bonneville thinks it can play with about any body in the SIC — which is saying quite a bit — and that would indicate a bunch of seniors.

Murtaugh and Kimberly opened on different sides of the score last week, Murtaugh bowing to Valley, which came out just about as tough as everyone in the Canyon Conference feared, while Kimberly was downing Oakley. This one appears to rank a tossup. One might want to favor Murtaugh this time around because it is the Red Devils turn. There's a lot of turn taking in this rivalry of late.

Thursday

MAGIC VALLEY — Magic Valley's prep football weekend gets off to an earlier than usual start tonight with games in Gooding and Glenns Ferry.

The Gooding Senators will host the Filer Wildcats at 8 p.m. Thursday. Both teams lost their openers. It is a non-conference game.

In an inter-district squabble, the Glenns Ferry Pilots will entertain the Mountain Home juniors.

Declo, mentioned most often in pre-season by Canyon Conference coaches, similarly was defeated in its first time out, bowing by six points to Aberdeen. Coach Mike Matthews, however, felt prior to the game that it could be as tough or tougher than any on the slate with the possible exception of Valley. He similarly contradicted his fellow coaches by noting that while Declo does return a lot of folks, much of the support must come from underclassmen. And he doesn't feel his troops are quick as quick as they've been recently.

He will run into pretty good quickness at Malta where Coach Keith Wilson doubtlessly is brewing another of his game plans that include some fancy plays. He had all opposition coaches wondering and worrying last year. With Richensback at quarterback and a fairly good return of veterans, the Trojans should give Declo a good battle.

As mentioned earlier, Valley came out tough and defeated a good Murtaugh crew quite convincingly. Valley was the class of the conference last year and despite heavy graduation loss, Coach Forrest Fonnesbeck's cries of poverty were received with arched eyebrows. He has trouble keeping the opposition's attention now.

Coach Barry Espil sends a young but spirited crew of Hansen Huskies against the Vikings. It would appear another year for Valley as Hansen leans heavily on sophomores and juniors. But the Huskies are coming back. Valley may be too big right now but others down the road aren't.

In other action, Shoshone, an overtime winner last week, takes its show to Oakley, which dropped its first one. This one appears a toss up.

Wood River, which didn't help itself with an untimley fumble and freebie touchdown in losing last week, tries to get back at Kuna. Kuna was badly handled its first time out and Coach John Hopkins is hoping for a wind to keep the enthusiasm up in his young crew.

Another third district crew, Fruitland, comes to Wendell. The Trojans are trying to cram a lot of experience into some newcomers and don't have great depth. But halfback Alan Lancaster will be back. The injury that appeared serious in last week's game against Hagerman turned out to be a painful charley horse.

Hagerman stays home to entertain the Rimrock Raiders as the third district continues to pour teams into the area. Hagerman topped Wendell and that's always a happy sign and moment in Piratedom.

Castleford brings its eight-man football home for the first time to the home folks and will be hosting the Richfield Tigers. Richfield overpowered Carey last week while Castleford had the misfortune of trying the new alignment against defending state champion Camas County.

Two games are on tap for Saturday. That Camas County crew travels to Bishop Kelly field in Boise to take on Meadows Valley. This could be a preview of the November eight-man state finals since Camas County is favored in the Snake River Conference and Meadows Valley draws the nod in the Long Pin league.

Buhl will be home to what Coach Greg Smith figures will be one of the stout foes on the schedule. He reports that White Pine should be a big team, bigger than his Indians, and he anticipates a very physical game.

Wife accused in horse swap

MINEOLA, L.I. (UPI) — Defense attorney F. Lee Bailey told a judge Wednesday it was the estranged wife of Dr. Mark Gerard who was responsible for a switch of horses in a Sept. 23, 1977, race at Belmont Park Race Track permitting the 45-year-old veterinarian to reap a $78,000 betting coup.

Bailey made his statement in Nassau County Court in an unsuccessful effort to adjourn Gerard's trial until Mrs. Gerard is emotionally capable of giving testimony.

He told Judge Raymond Harrington that Mrs. Gerard now has "serious mental problems" and he expressed doubt that she could withstand intense cross-examination or could "give a credible account at this point."

Stingley still on serious list

CASTRO VALLEY, Calif. (UPI) — Doctors at Eden Valley Hospital Wednesday issued a brief but optimistic statement on the condition of Darryl Stingley, the New England wide receiver paralyzed by a broken neck suffered in a pre-season game.

They said that he is showing "steady improvement in his general medical condition, particularly his pulmonary condition. Although his condition is serious, a more optimistic view is being taken.

Stingley, 26, was injured Aug. 12 during a game with the Oakland Raiders.

Rice given third award

NEW YORK (UPI) — Slugger Jim Rice of the Boston Red Sox became only the second three-time winner of the award Wednesday when he was named the American League's Player of the Month for August.

Rice batted .379 with six doubles, two triples, 12 homers and 93 total bases. He knocked in 33 runs and scored 27 while compiling a .750 slugging percentage.

Pitcher Frank Tanana of the California Angels is the only other player to win the monthly award three times.

Louisville seeks Ali for mayor

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (UPI) — A group of supporters of Muhammad Ali appealed Wednesday for contributions to begin an effort to draft the two-time heavyweight boxing champ as mayor of Louisville, his hometown.

A newspaper classified advertisement asked fans of Ali to call a telephone number. When dialed the voice says "we're friends of Muhammad Ali — we would like to show him our support by drafting him for mayor."

The voice then offers to record the caller's name and telephone number and return the call with more information.

Jackson shows improvement

NEW YORK (UPI) — Reggie Jackson was reported showing "excellent improvement" by the New York Yankees Wednesday and could join the world champions for their important series with the Boston Red Sox beginning Thursday night.

Dr. Maurice Cowen, the Yankees' club physician, reported that Jackson spent Tuesday night in traction. Dr. Cowan said Jackson could be released from Lenox Hill Hospital Thursday and proceed to Boston. Another Yankee spokesman preferred not to speculate when Jackson will be able to play, saying merely "that remains to be seen."

Jackson had batted .400 and knocked in 12 runs in 12 games before he suffered the ailment.

Money keeps Ali career going

NEW YORK (UPI) — Four years ago, almost to the day, Muhammad Ali, who was about to meet George Foreman and becoe only the second man ever to regain the world heavyweight title, motored down from the mountains in Pennsylvania and issued what he felt was the most earth-shaking announcement in boxing history.

Standing in front of a microphone in Madison Square Garden's Hall of Fame Club, he declared, as convincingly as he could, that regardless of how he did against Foreman, he was going to retire for good following the contest.

"This is my last fight," he said.

"Positively?" someone baited him.

"Absolutely," Ali answered. "After this one, no more."

Since then, he has fought 11 times.

With the summer season upon us, and this being the accepted time for reruns, here comes Ali again with yet another momentous announcement, strangely reminiscent of the one he made before.

"This is my last fight," he says, meaning the one coming up with Leon Spinks.

His meeting with Spinks in the New Orleans Superdome on Sept. 15, in which he'll be seeking to become the first man ever to win the heavyweight championship three times, is no more likely to be Ali's last fight any more than was his successful challenge against Foreman in Zaire, Africa, in October of 1974.

It is true that privately, Ali frequently thinks of not fighting anymore. Why shouldn't he think that way? He's 36, he has enough money to do anything he wants, within reason, and the training required for the kind of fight he anticipates with Spinks has long since grown to be an effort and a bore.

But that insatiable desire for continued recognition and attention, the like of which Ali has grown accustomed to these past 14 years, plus the money, is what always prompts him to keep changing his mind about actually quitting. It isn't easy to turn your back on money, not when they keep pushing it on you, and it's even harder to bow out and become just plain Muhammad He-Used-To-Be, attended by no one, after having been treated as a king always surrounded by a full court.

Ali is still the biggest drawing card in sports. There have been various reports as to how much he's getting for his rematch with Spinks. Some of those reports say he's accepting less money than his opponent for the first time since his pre-championship days now that he's not the title-holder anymore, and others say he'll receive the same amount as Spinks.

Actually, Ali will get at least $3.5 million, possibly a little more, and if he keeps being offered that kind of money you can look for him to continue fighting until he can't possibly get his hands up anymore.

The idea which appeals most to Ali, and has for some time now, is being named special ambassador by Jimmy Carter and being given a post similar to that of Andrew Young, so that he can travel around the world, talk to the leaders of the various nations and spread good will for the USA.

He'd probably do a fine job of it. Still, I can't help thinking of the obvious hypocrisy in all this because here's a man who flatly refused to fight for his country and now is suddenly excited about going abroad and extolling its virtues.

Apart from that, Ali has been kicking around a couple of other ideas, ones more closely connected with his upcoming fight with Spinks. Both these ideas are predicated on his beating Spinks, which he honestly feels he can do.

His first option would be to keep the title six months or so and then announce his retirement. There he goes thinking about it again. Ali's second option is based on the possibility of his knocking out Spinks early and having an easier time of it than he might have imagined. In such case, he has confided a couple of times, he would be inclined to fight again and his opponent would be Larry Holmes, the World Boxing Council's heavyweight champ. But only if the price was right.

For next week's fight with Spinks, Ali has been training harder than he did before his first contest with him. His weight is down to 220 pounds and he'll probably enter the ring somewhere around 218, which is a good weight for him. Last Monday, Labor Day, was his first day off in almost three weeks. He still ran four miles in the morning and did "little exercise."

"I'm gonna be ready this time," he says. "This fight is the most important one of my life. I got to win it and get out on top."

Dodgers drop Giants to hike league lead

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Joe Ferguson slugged a three-run homer and Ron Cey hit a two-run shot Wednesday, powering the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 9-2 victory over San Francisco to extend their lead over the Giants in the National League West to three games.

Cey's 18th homer came off starter Jim Barr, 7-11, after Steve Garvey singled leading off the second. Heity Cruz homered for the Giants in the top of the inning.

With the score 5-2, Ferguson delivered his 14th homer in the fifth inning off Greg Minton following a single by Cey and a walk to Rick Monday. Ferguson also had a pair of doubles and drove in a fourth run with a two-base hit off Ed Plank in the seventh while Cey added a pair of singles.

Doug Rau, 13-8, pitching five-hit ball for seven innings. Rick Rhoden pitched the final two innings. Darrell Evans accounted for the second Giant run with a homer in the fifth.

Rau had a run-scoring single in the second and Monday collected a two-run single in the third as Los Angeles improved its record against San Francisco to 9-7 with two games left in the season series at Candlestick Park next week.

Pirates 4, Cards 1

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Rookie Don Robinson pitched a five-hitter while consecutive doubles by Ed Ott and Bill Robinson highlighted a two-run second inning Wednesday night which gave Pittsburgh a 4-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and extended the Pirates' winning streak to 11 games — longest in the National League this season.

The Pirates, who have won 21 of their last 23 games, remain ½ game behind the Philadelphia Phillies in the NL East.

Robinson, now 12-5, has won his last seven decisions. He had a shutout going until the seventh inning when George Hendrick, who had three hits, doubled and scored on a single by Ted Simmons. Robinson struck out nine and walked none in going the distance for the eighth time this season. St. Louis starter John Denny dropped to 11-10 with the loss.

The back-to-back doubles by Ott and Bill Robinson both bounced off the gloves of St. Louis outfielders. Ott led off the inning with his double which eluded Hendrick's attempted diving catch in center field. Robinson knocked in Ott with his double off right fielder Jerry Mumphrey's glove. Robinson advanced to third on a groundout and came home on Phil Garner's sacrifice fly for a 2-0 Pirate lead.

Omar Moreno, Dave Parker and Willie Stargell hit successive singles with one out in the fifth to make it 3-0. Frank Taveras led off the seventh with a single, stole second and went to third when Simmons threw wildly on the play.

Padres 5, Braves 3

ATLANTA (UPI) — Jerry Turner, who earlier hit a two-run homer, singled home pinch runner Ozzie Smith with the deciding run in the eighth inning Wednesday night, propelling the San Diego Padres to a 5-3 triumph over the Atlanta Braves.

Pinch hitter Oscar Gamble led off the eighth with a single off reliever Gene Garber, 3-5, and was replaced by Smith. Barry Evans followed with an infield hit, moving Smith to second, and Turner followed with a lined single up the middle. Pinch hitter Fernando Gonzalez' double play grounder eventually scored Evans to cap a three-run inning.

Atlanta tied the score 3-3 in the fifth when Glenn Hubbard singled off starter Randy Jones and advanced to second on Barry Bonnell's single. After Garry Matthews hit into a force play, Jeff Burroughs stroked a run-scoring single.

Phils 8, Cubs 1

CHICAGO (UPI) — Mike Schmidt batted in four runs with a double and a three-run homer and Steve Carlton pitched a seven-hitter Wednesday to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to an 8-1 triumph over the Chicago Cubs.

The win preserved the Phils' lead in the National League East for at least another day.

Schmidt's double scored Richie Hebner who had singled in the second and after Schmidt was out trying for third, Tim McCarver doubled and scored on Carlton's single. Schmidt's homer, his 18th, came in the third after singles by Larry Bowa and Hebner.

Bake McBride also homered for the Phillies to open the seventh inning. In the ninth, Bowa singled and Garry Maddox was safe on Ivan DeJesus' error. Both scored on Hebner's double.

Expos 8, Mets 2

MONTREAL (UPI) — Larry Parrish drove in three runs and Ross Grimsley became the second National League pitcher to reach the 17-victory plateau Wednesday night in a rain-shortened 8-2 win by the Montreal Expos over the New York Mets.

Time was called with one out in the bottom of the seventh inning and was never resumed, enabling the Expos to stretch their winning streak to five games, longest of the season.

Montreal took a 3-1 lead in the fourth on doubles by ndre Dawson, Ellis Valentine and Warren Cromartie and a run-scoring single by Parrish. Parrish later doubled home two other runs in the sixth inning when the Expos scored four more times to go ahead 8-2.

NY, Sox win to set showdown stage

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ed Figueroa scattered five hits over eight innings to notch his 15th win Wednesday night and the New York Yankees capitalized on three Detroit errors for four unearned runs en route to their 12th victory in the last 14 games, an 8-2 romp over the Tigers.

The win enabled the second-place Yankees to remain four games behind AL East-leading Boston on the eve of their crucial four-game series at Fenway Park.

Rookie second baseman Lou Whitaker fumbled one ground ball in the fourth and dropped a pop fly in the sixth that resulted in three unearned runs. Center fielder Ron LeFlore dropped a long sacrifice fly by Chris Chambliss to let in another unearned run in the fourth. The victory was the eighth in Figueroa's last 10 decisions, lifting his record to 15-9. Sparky Lyle hurled the ninth.

Mickey Rivers led an 11-hit Yankee attack with three singles and three runs scored. Graig Nettles and Chambliss each knocked in a pair of runs, the latter with two sacrifice flies.

The Yankees scored four runs off loser Jack Billingham, 15-7, in the fifth when they sent 10 men to the plate. Bucky Dent and Rivers started the inning with singles, Willie Randolph sacrificed and Thurman Munson drew an intentional walk. LeFlore went to the warning track in center for Chambliss' fly and dropped it for an error as two runs scored. Nettles singled and Lou Piniella doubled to complete the four-run inning.

Boston 2, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Veteran Luis Tiant pitched a two-hitter and Carl Yastrzemski hit a two-run homer Wednesday night to help the Boston Red Sox maintain their four-game lead in the American League East with a 2-0 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

The 37-year old Tiant, 10-7, spaced two singles and retired 12 batters in a row over one stetch to earn his 10th complete game. Rich Dauer had a third-inning single and Terry Crowley a seventh-inning single for the only Orioles hits off, Tiant who struck out five and walked two in pitching his fourth shutout of the season and the 47th of his career.

Yastrzemski's 12th home run — and 378th lifetime — came after Jim Rice coaxed a walk in the seventh inning, and snapped Dennis Martinez' four-game winning streak.

Martinez, 12-11, held the Red Sox hitless until Cartlon Fisk singled with one out in the fifth inning. Yastrzemski's homer, only his second hit in 17 at bats against Martinez this season, was the only other Boston hit.

The victory was only the second in the last six games for the Red Sox, who open a crucial four-game series at home with the second place New York Yankees beginning Thursday night.

Royals 11, A's 8

OAKLAND (UPI) — Al Cowens' bloop single with one out in the 12th inning scored pinch runner Willie Wilson from third base Wednesday, igniting a three-run rally that lifted the Kansas City Royals to an 11-8 victory over the Oakland A's.

The win was Kansas City's fifth in a row and Oakland's 20th loss in 23 games.

With the score tied 8-8, U.L. Washington started Kansas City's winning rally in the 12th with a walk off loser Dave Heaverlo, 3-6. After Hal McRae forced Washington at second on a sacrifice bunt attempt and was replaced by Wilson, John Wathan singled and Darrell Porter walked to load the bases. Heaverlo was relieved by Elias Sosa, who gave up Cowens' single to short left. One out later, Amos Otis singled for his fourth hit of the game to score Wathan and Porter with two insurance runs.

Brewers 7, Jays 0

TORONTO (UPI) — Robin Yount slugged a pair of two-run homers and singled home a fifth run, while Lary Sorensen fired a four-hit shutout for his 16th victory Wednesday night in a 7-0 triumph by the Milwaukee Brewers over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Yount drove in Sal Bando, who had singled, with his first homer in the fourth and homered again in the eighth after Larry Hisle's double. Yount followed a double by Sal Bando in the sixth with an RBI single off loser Jesse Jefferson, 7-12. The two homers gave Yount six for the season.

Sorensen recorded his third shutout and 17th complete game to improve his record to 16-10. He struck out one and did not walk a batter, yielding a first-inning double to Bob Bailor, a third-inning single to Dave McKay, a seventh-inning single to John Mayberry and another single to Bailor in the ninth.

Don Money's solo homer on the second pitch of the game accounted for Milwaukee's first run and Cecil Cooper's sacrifice fly in the ninth closed out the scoring for the Brewers.

Chicago 1, Twins 0

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (UPI) — Left-hander Ken Kravec tossed a five-hitter and Greg Pryor stroked a fifth-inning run-scoring single Wednesday night to stake the Chicago White Sox to a 1-0 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Kravec, 11-13, walked five and struck out eight in posting his sixth complete game. It was his first win in three starts since h shut out Kansas City on August 23.

Minnesota stranded 10 runners, but couldn't help Dave Goltz, 11-10, who pitched a four-hitter. Two of those four hits resulted in the game's only run in the fifth. Chet Lemon doubled with one out and one batter later, Pryor singled to left.

Texas 11, Cal 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. (UPI) — Toby Harrah ripped a three-run homer and Richie Zisk singled in two more runs to spark a five-run seventh-inning uprising Wednesday night that carried the Texas Rangers to an 11-5 triumph over the California Angels in the first game of a doubleheader.

The loss snapped a four-game Angel winning streak and dropped the Angels to 2½ games behind division-leading Kansas City in the AL West.

Rookie right-hander Steve Comer, 8-3, won his fifth straight game for Texas with relief help from Doyle Alexander, while Nolan Ryan suffered his 12th setback against only six wins.

Texas entered the seventh inning ahead 4-3 after Bump Wills doubled home the tie-breaking run in the sixth. Juan Beniquez led off the seventh with a single and after a sacrifice bunt, Al Oliver was walked intentionally. The Rangers executed a double steal while Bobby Bonds was striking out and Zisk followed with his two-run single to make it 6-3 and chase Ryan. Dyar Miller came on and walked Jim Sundberg before Harrah cracked his eighth homer, a line drive to left field.

The Rangers added two runs in the ninth when Bonds led off his 26th homer and Wills collected his RBI double of the game, following a walk to Harrah.

Gerulaitis, McEnroe advance

NEW YORK (UPI) — Vitas Gerulaitis ignored a painfully twisted ankle in the first set Thursday night to join 19-year-old NCAA champion John McEnroe in the semifinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

Neither the determination of Gerulaitis nor the superb play of McEnroe, however, could take the shine off a pair of sterling performances by three-time defending women's champion Chris Evert and top-seeded Wimbledon champion Martina Navratilova.

A record day-night crowd totaling 30,580 watched the card of one-sided victories on another warm, pleasant day.

Evert crushed mighty mite Tracy Austin, the fifth-seeded 15-year-old from Rolling Hills, Calif., 7-5, 6-1, moments after Navratilova disposed of 11th seeded Virginia Ruzici of Romania, 6-3, 6-2, in 48 minutes.

McEnroe became one of the youngest semifinalists in U.S. Open history when he stopped "Marathon Man" Butch Walts, 6-1, 6-2, 7-6. McEnroe, who turned pro in June after dropping out of Stanford, now faces the winner of Thursday night's Jimmy Connors-Brian Gottfried match.

Gerulaitis grimaced in pain and sprawled to the hard asphalt-based court when he turned his right ankle while reaching for a backhand in the fourth game of the first set against South African Johan Kriek. Gerulaitis used his racket for a crutch for a few moments then seemed to recover immediately to blitz Kriek, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2.

Playing before the largest night crowd in Open history, 15,794, the fourth-seeded Gerulaitis was the beneficiary of 16 doublefaults by Kriek, who had advanced through five rounds via moderately impressive tennis and an extremely easy draw.

Gerulaitis was so dominant he won even the game in which he was hurt with Kriek serving, then won three more in a row to take the first set. Kriek held service only once in each set and broke Gerulaitis only twice.

Gerulaitis next faces the winner of Thursday afternoon's match between top-seeded Wimbledon champion Bjorn Borg and eighth-seeded Raul Ramirez.

McEnroe, the first teen-ager since Borg in 1975 and only the sixth in history to reach the semis of the U.S. championships, had almost as easy a time as Gerulaitis. McEnroe encountered only moderate resistance from Walts, the 23-year-old power server who upset defending champion Guillermo Vilas in a 4-hour, 11-minute fourth round match.

The ladies held court most of the afternoon with Evert and Austin matched like a pair of jewels on the stadium court and Navratilova ruling in the grandstand before an afternoon crowd of 14,786.

Evert knows she is still "a notch ahead" of the 5-foot-3 Austin, who has improved greatly while growing three inches and gaining 15 pounds in the last year. Evert also seemed to be serving notice that she is back in the groove and ready for her anticipated meeting in the finals with Navratilova.

"If I'm not ready now, I don't know when I'll be ready," Evert said. "I'm getting better with each match."

Evert felt she needed time off from tennis last winter to "clear the cobwebs" from her head. The pressure had been building on her without release for several years. She took off nearly four months and when she came back she was still winning but there was something missing.

"Call it fire, call it concentration, whatever, it was missing," Evert said. She also said she had no regrets. If enjoying life more meant winning a little less, she was willing to pay the price.

Evert wants the No. 1 spot again now, but she is not consumed by her desire. She is relaxed and playing well.

Idaho State loses top running back

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho State University's leading rusher last season will miss the next 3 games and may be out for the rest of the season because of a broken hand, Big Sky Conference officials in Boise reported Wednesday.

They said Eddie McGill, senior running back for ISU, suffered a broken right hand last Saturday in the season opener against Utah State University at Osaka, Japan.

McGill gained 52 yards in 24 carries in the Utah State encounter, which was played in a steady downpour of rain. Utah State won the game 10-0.

Last season, McGill was the leading ISU rusher with 801 yards.

Portland and Walton separate again on medical differences

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Bill Walton and the Portland Trail Blazers, after two conferences on a possible reconciliation of their estrangement over team medical practices, Wednesday decided to go their separate ways.

Walton and Blazer owner Larry Weinberg met for more than seven hours last Saturday, and nine or ten hours Tuesday night in Los Angeles to re-evaluate their differences.

The Blazer office issued a short statement Wednesday concerning those meetings, which said: "Larry Weinberg and Bill Walton held a second meeting in Los Angeles, the result of which is that the Trail Blazers and Walton will continue to seek a trade satisfactory to both. As the Trail Blazers have consistently stated since Walton first expressed a desire to be traded on Aug. 1, the trade will have to be one which gives the club value for the league's most valuable player."

Walton's friend and agent, Jack Scott, had arranged for the meetings between Walton and Weinberg. The owner had cut short his European vacation to return to his Los Angeles home to talk to Walton, who led the Blazers to the 1977 NBA title and had them on the road to one of the best won-loss records in NBA last season until injured Feb. 28 in a game against Philadelphia.

Weinberg had said prior to the meeting with Walton that he had re-evaluated the Blazer situation with regards to all practices, including medical, involving the management and Blazer players, and he found nothing wanting.

"I went into the meetings with Bill with the belief that we had exercised nothing but the very, very best in the treatment of players and our conduct with them and that we were following the soundest of management practices."

Walton continues to hobble on crutches, with his injured left foot in a cast. He had hurt the foot against the 76ers on the last day of February and was sidelined the final 22 games of the regular season.

Improving Bobcats not cowed by loss

BURLEY — "We will be a better team next time out — not that we were a bad team last weekend."

That's the feeling of new Burley Coach Eric Bjorkman as he prepares his Bobcats for Rigby and their Cross State Conference opener in two weeks. The Bobcats have this Friday off.

Burley bowed to Bonneville in its first game and the coach reported "we looked just about the way we expected to with a lot of inexperienced players, a new coaching staff and a new system. We made some mental errors just as we expected. But we didn't expect quite as many as we had."

"I've spent most of today going over the film and it shows that if you take seven or eight plays out of it it was a tight game or we win. But Bonneville is not a bad football team. They think this might be there year to do something in the SIC. I think they might be able to," he said.

As of this week the Bobcat team was comprised of 35 players, only 11 of whom had previous varsity experience.

Juniors counted on for help at 175-pound fullback Don Konrad, whose long run put Burley on the scoreboard against Bonneville; 175-pound defensive end Brent Johnson; 140-pound quarterback Craig Jones; 155-pound wide receiver Frank Heckendorn, and 170-pound tackle Troy Crane.

Coach Bjorkman believes the team's strengths are overall good quickness and good skill people. The team's weakness is an abvious lack of depth.

The Burley schedule includes Sept. 15, Rigby at Burley; Sept. 22, Mountain Home at Burley; Sept. 29, Burley at Madison; Oct. 13, Burley at Caldwell; Oct. 20, Buhl at Burley; Oct. 27, Blackfoot at Burley; Nov. 3, Burley at Jerome, and Nov. 11, Burley at Minico (noon).

High jumper honored

NEW YORK (UPI) — Franklin Jacobs, whose 7-foot, 7¼ inch high jump in the 1978 Millrose Games is considered one of track and field's most remarkable feats, was honored as the winner of the Tanqueray Achievement Award Wednesday for excellence in amateur sports.

Jacobs, who stands only 5 feet, 8 inches and thus jumps almost two feet more than his height, received a silver trophy from John Heilmann, president of the sponsoring Somerset Importers, Ltd.

Jacobs also said he thinks he can jump higher during the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow. His Millrose record has since been surpassed by Russia's Vladimir Yashchenko, who jumped 7-feet, 8½ inches in the European Indoor games last March.

Strange games present odd entertainment

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The way Vince Lombardi, the late, great football coach, put it: "Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing."

But then Lombardi never played Prul, or Infinity Volleyball or any of the other New Games that are teaching enthusiasts it can be better to lose.

When people focus on the joy of playing, there are no losers, say proponents of New Gamesmanship.

They fly in the face of the credo that competition made the country great and the flag respected. But New Games are growing anyway, say the founders.

One of the first New Games inventors is Stewart Brand, publisher of the Whole Earth Catalog which caught the spirit of the young in the late 1960s.

Brand says he thought up the first New Games Tournament "out of shrieking boredom, my own and the boredom of other people, and that's good raw material for any innovation."

One of his first games was World War IV, later called Slaughter, in which players try to do six or seven things simultaneously —knock each other off a mat while placing basketballs in waste baskets — while the women try to de-pants the men.

In this atmosphere the loser turns out to be the center of attention, the star of the event.

Prul is an elimination game in which blindfolded players jump around saying "prul, prul" until the last of the species is left. "The loser is the hero," says Brand, who does not regard losing as a bad thing.

Infinity Volleyball is a collective effort to keep a ball in the air to communal shouts of "68, 69, 70 ... " The loser gets good-natured laughs.

"Personally, I am dubious about any situation in life in which it is not okay to make mistakes," Brand says. "Unless we make mistakes, things can't get better."

Since their birth in 1973, New Games have won 200,000 followers, spreading into churches and schools. They are more of an attitude than a specific group of games.

People of all ages can play, there is no second team, nobody gets hurt and there's lots of creativity. New Games tend to be invented spontaneously.

The idea is to experience cooperation as partners rather than as competitors. The hope is to create new perspectives on how to work and live with other people.

Thus, a crowd of New Games enthusiasts can spend hours keeping an Earthball — a large globe of the world made of heavy canvas —bouncing in the air through hard breathing and alert, cooperative effort.

Or the Earthball can be used competitively, as when one group lies on its back encircled by a pickup team. Those on their backs try to kick the ball over the heads of the standing team. The standees, using only their hands, try to keep the ball in the circle.

Some other activities are a tag game called Snake in the Grass in which everybody winds up on the ground wiggling and hissing, Standoff in which two persons face-to-face try to push each other off-balance, and People Pass in which a person is hoisted and passed overhead along a double line and, as Brand says, "everybody gets a ride."

This kind of sport is encouraged by the New Games Foundation of San Francisco, a non-profit organization which organizes weekend training programs around the country.

Brand is a foundation founder but is no longer formally connected with it. He puts out the Coevolution Quarterly and serves Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. as a parttime consultant organizing public events and think tank sessions in which Brown meets offbeat but prestigious personalities.

Originally, Brand thought of New Games "rather grandiosely, as a way to reinvest in the culture the idea that rules keep needing too be changed."

Now he sees New Games "as just another ingredient on the shelf for loosening up a tight society. It's just another of the legacies of the 1960s."

The newest outdoor sport is playing earthball with a huge canvas air-filled balloon. The ball is kept in the air for hours in a cooperative effort of those involved in the game. The essence of the game is to provide exercise and entertainment without the associated problems of competition. The game and others like were designed by New Games of San Francisco, a non-profit organization

Market problems hold down hunting for alligators

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — There are more alligators than people in three southern Louisiana parishes that will be off-limits to gator hunters because the hides can't be exported.

J. Burton Angelle, secretary of the state Wildlife and Fisheries Department, said this week the alligator hunting season planned for next month has been indefinitely postponed.

The reason — international trading rules prohibit trading in the endangered species. And American buyers of the hides have plentiful stocks purchased from Louisiana hunters the last two years.

Officials in Cameron, Calcasieu and Vermillion parishes, where the federal government has permitted strictly controlled hunts since 1975, said their marshlands have been overflowing with an estimated 800,000 of the ugly reptiles.

However, landowners in the three parishes supported the postponement, saying they didn't want the expense of collecting the alligators and storing the hides while awaiting a change in the trade regulations.

Alligator meat can't be sold legally even during a hunt, so the only purpose for hunters to catch the reptiles is to clear them from their land and to sell the hides.

Gators are caught on hooks baited with chunks of meat, then blasted in the head with a shotgun. Hunters are required to purchase permits before beginning the hunt and tags to be attached to each alligator hide.

Fish and Game sets trapping seasons

BOISE — Idaho trapping seasons and regulations for 1978-1979 give added protection to the muskrat in critical areas and allow more beaver to be taken incontrolled units.

The muskrat seasons were cut back by three months in region 4 and parts of region 6. The high prices for pelts has created more trapping pressure than department officials see as allowable.

The seasons for furbearing species for the Magic Valley area follow.

Red fox trapping outside of National Forest lands in Valley County is Dec. 1-31, in the remainder of the region, October 1-December 31. Muskrat trapping in Adams, Boise and Valley counties and that part of Washington County in the Weiser River drainage upstream from and including Crane Creek is November 1-April 30. The remainder of Washington County is Dec. 1-Feb. 15.

Muskrat trapping in the Big Wood drainage will be October 15-Dec. 31.

Region 4, Cassia, Jerome, Lincoln, Minidoka, Twin Falls, and Blaine and Camas County outside of the Big Wood drainage will be November 1-Jan. 31.

The muskrat season on the Niagara Springs Wildlife Management Area is from the first day after the close of duck season through Jan. 31.

Mink trapping season in Blaine County within the Salmon River drainage is Nov. 1-Dec. 31. Blaine and Camas within the Big Wood river drainage, Oct. 15-Jan. 31, remainder of region is Nov. 1-Jan. 31.

Hagerman and Billingsley Creek WMAs are closed.

Fishing story contest offers Ireland fish trip

TWIN FALLS — Lying fishermen and fishing liars will get a chance to enhance their fish tall telling in a contest sponsored by the Gladding International Sport Fishing Museum in South Otselic New York.

Exceptional lies or stories about fishing can be entered in the contest which will close November 1. The winner of the contest will receive a week-long fishing holiday on Ireland's west coast.

The amateur lying fisherman will not be forced to compete with the professional liar since the contest is divided into amateur writers and professional writers.

Any story worthy of a good lie can be submitted to the Gladding Fishing Tall Tales Contest, P.O. Box 586, Black Bay Annex, Boston, Mass. 02117.

The entry should include the name and address of the writer, along with the telephone number and amateur or professional writer status.

Any tall tale fishing story will be accepted for the contest no matter how odd or how big the lie.

An example of such stories was submitted by Roger Hantke of Mitchell, South Dakota.

"One fine spring day I embarked on a trout fishing trip. Along with my favorite tackle, I carried a lunch put up by my wife consisting of coffee, sandwich and a plastic container of my wife's baked beans. Tucked neatly in my tackle box was a package of rolaids to ease the effects of the beans.

I usually bait a small hook with salmon eggs and let it drift down with the current, then retrieve it slowly. As I worked my way down the stream, I spotted a huge rainbow lying in a deep pool. I drifted my baited line down and bumped him on the nose, and he never flinched. I took a handful of the eggs and tossed them in the current. The trout eagerly gobbled up all, all but the cluster containing my hook. I tried every hook, lure, and fly in my tackle box.

The big fish seemed to be grinning as he watched all my best efforts. I sat and pondered the situation for a moment.

Suddenly, I was stuck with a brilliant idea. I took out the beans and dumped them into the pool. I looked gleefully on as the rainbow snatched them up. After about a half an hour, the trout began to swim in circles and roll his eyes.

I then offered him a lure. I know he couldn't resist — a Rolaid taped to my hook. After a seesaw battle, I landed my prize.

My dear wife still doesn't understand my sudden interest in her cooking but I never go fishing without her lunch."

Besides the fishing trip to Ireland, the winner will also receive a load of fishing goodies including line, a fishfinder, a lifevest and a carry-all canvas bag. The 10 runner-ups will receive fishing line and initialed carry-bags.

Fish and Game hosting big game hunting class

TWIN FALLS — Local hunters and successful bighorn sheep permit holders will get a chance to learn how to hunt different animals, where to hunt and how to prepare the meat in seminars sponsored by the Department of Fish and Game.

Local hunters who would like to know more about big game hunting, techniques and field care and food preparation should plan to attend the Big Game Seminar in room 117 of the Shields Building Monday night.

Fish and Game Information Officer Stu Murrell will present the information and the seminar will last from 7 to 10 p.m. There is no charge for participating in the seminar.

The F&G Department will host seminars in Salmon and Boise to aid bighorn hunters in having success in their hunts. Students will be instructed in identification of a trophy ram and his behavior, the physical requirements for a hunt and suitable firearms and equipment.

Swen

For the first time in years, I saw a pelican in Hagerman Valley. Thrilled the dickens out of me. Perhaps we are doing something right.

Had a couple of calls about a fishing contest at Salmon Reservoir. I hate fishing contests, but here is how to enter: You must register at Cactus Pete's Treasure House in Jackpot, before you catch the fish. It must be a Walleyed Pike (Perch) to win the contest. So far no one who has caught a Walleye has been registered to win. The contest closes at noon Jan. 1, 1979.

The smell of the fish hatchery across from Box Canyon on the Snake River isn't as bad as it was. Had some calls from water skiers and some fishermen to find out the cause. A T-N reporter ran down the story, and it was caused by a settling pond.

THE FISHING: Magic Reservoir was good last week. Many small fish, but did catch onto a 3-pound rainbow. Limits of 8- to 12-inch fish were the usual.

Sunday last, I went to Salmon Reservoir. The wind kept the boats off the lake, so went in the upper end and tried an old trick. I have found that this lake is best fished into the wind, instead of finding a lee side. Find a beach where the wind meets you head on and fish with worms until you catch a scrap fish. Use the meat of this scrap fish cut into strips. The wave action takes feed from the bank and rolls it out to the fish who are feeding about 20 feet from the bank. My 3-hour try gave me a fine limit of 14- to 18-inch fish. Next time try it. Better than coming home just because the wind was blowing. Does make for a rosey cheek also.

Some beautiful catfish are being caught near Weiser on the Snake River. Have seen some 6-pound fish, and they are taking much larger fish. Again, cut bait is the answer.

Overheard: "I'm so poor, if I ever heard what E.F. Hutton says, I wouldn't know what he was talking about."

Woman gives wild outdoors hints

(c) 1978 Chicago Sun-Times

What's a girl from Winnetka, Ill., know about the great outdoors? Very little, admits Maggie Nichols.

But that doesn't mean she can't grow up and discover. And Maggie Nichols did just that. In fact, she learned so much she became the first woman editor of Field and Stream magazine and has written a great informational book called "Wild, Wild Woman" (Berkeley, $4.95).

"I grew up in Winnetka, spent my whole life there until I went away to school," says Nichols, who now lives in New York's Greenwich Village. "Really, there wasn't much fishing to be done there, but there was a lot to be done out of doors. We spent our time in the lagoon area. I suppose you would call me a tomboy."

Since those days on Chicago's North Shore, Maggie Nichols feels she has come a long way. Her book is a gem, not only for women, but for beginning men as well. It takes each outdoor subject step by step, exactly as she had to learn them. And the subjects range from what to expect on the first fishing trip to camping to fighting bugs to making love in the outdoors.

"All of us need to keep in touch with wild, unruly things," Nichols says. "The women's movement (and the outdoor movement) is all for the best. Get away from the television and you'll save the world."

Obviously, she has grown to love the outdoors, even (though (or maybe because) she fights the New York Establishment.

"Things break down tremendously in the out of doors," says Nichols, who frequently travels with her husband on her excursions. "In the woods there is a closeness with other people because you know how fragile your own existence is."

That may sound trite but Maggie Nichols has discovered it on her own. And she thinks there are thousands — perhaps millions — of other women who also would discover it if they tried.

"You can do almost anything you like in the out of doors," says Nichols. "You can go fishing and if you don't like it, you can daydream, hike, lie in the grass and read a mystery or take photographs.

"People shouldn't feel so obligated to do things, things they don't like. And too many stay home because they don't feel they can do things.

"A lot of the problems for women (getting started in the outdoors) is psychological. If they are urban people, they have the feeling they don't want to get dirty and messy."

And what about the roles that our society assigns to people?

"Less and less, people are thinking that little girls have to sit around and play with dolls and tea sets," Nichols says. "Some little girls enjoy the out of doors more than boys.

"Absolutely, things should be shared when having an outdoor experience. After all, you're out there to have fun with each other. Any woman who would go on a fishing trip and end up cleaning the fish and cooking dinner is out of her tree. I know of instances where men do all the cooking in the out of doors."

Some outdoor experts, even women, suggest going without husband or boy-friend when doing something new. "That's bad advice," Nichols says. "That's why you have the experience, to share it with somebody. That's one of the reasons why more women are in the out of doors. Their husbands are saying, 'C'mon with me, let's do this as a family.'"

In fact, some women are having to take the leadership role in getting the family out. The rise in the divorce rate has put the burden on many women who have never been fishing or camping.

"Divorce has encouraged them to do things," Nichols says. "It makes an excellent vacation. Camping trips for single parents are cheaper and more fun. If the woman has a boy, she feels an obligation to teach him the things he should know in the out of doors. In fact, I know several women who are married and they are the ones to take the boy out and introduce him to the out of doors."

The best story in "Wild, Wild Woman" has to do with a night in a motel room when Nichols and her husband went out in freezing weather to watch an eclipse of the moon. Their friends remained in the room and when Maggie and husband shouted for them to come out and see the eclipse, the couple replied: "We don't have to. We're watching it on TV."

That says a lot about both sexes.

L.A. plans minimum building

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Los Angeles will build a rowing course and upgrade existing facilities but probably will not construct any new projects if the 1984 Olympics come to Los Angeles.

Mayor Tom Bradley Tuesday released the minutes of the presentation city representatives made to the International Olympic Committee May 17 in Athens. Los Angeles and the IOC are wrangling over a contract for the 1984 games.

Bradley gave the minutes to the Los Angeles City Council, completing his formal presentation to the governing officials, who must ratify the contract if Los Angeles is to hold the games.

Although the minutes did not promise much in the way of new facilities for the games, there was no mention of the "spartan" attitude that city officials have pledged to maintain to hold down costs to taxpayers.

In the minutes, city representatives agreed to build a 2,200-meter long, 140-meter wide, 3.5-meter deep rowing course for the Olympic rowing and canoeing events.

The city had earlier suggested using an old rowing course in the Long Beach area, although the city said it eventually wanted to build a new course, anyway.

The city agreed to mark off existing waterways at Hanson Dam or Ballona Creek as a 1,000-meter long training course.

Facilities offered for shooting competition at Whittier Narrows will be upgraded to comply with shooting federation standards, according to the minutes, and the city will transport horses involved in equestrian events to the main arena for the show jumping grand prix.

Council President John Ferraro referred the Olympic package to City Attorney Burt Pines for a legal report on how well the city would be protected. It could be three to four weeks before the council begins debate on whether to approve the contract.

Pate still far from year's goal

COLUMBUS, Ga. (UPI) — Jerry Pate has yet to fulfill the first step of his two-phase goal for the 1978 PGA season as goes into Thursday's opening round of the $175,000 Southern Open at Green Island Country Club.

At the beginning of the year, Pate looked to extend his string of two-victory seasons to three years. After capturing the U.S. and Canadian Opens in 1976, Pate came back to win last year's Phoenix and Southern Opens.

With the tour entering its final stage, Pate has yet to win a tournament, though he has won $132,999 to rank 14th in this year's PGA money standings.

In last year's Southern Open, Pate set a tournament record with his seven-stroke victory over four other players. He took the lead on the first day and never relinquished it.

Pate's game is obviously well suited for Green Island's 6,791-yard layout, and he entered Wednesday's first round with a sense of confidence.

"This year's not over yet," he said. "If I considered not winning a disappointment, it would be the wrong way to take it. If you don't achieve a goal, you've just got to work harder.

"Basically, every phase of my game is in good shape, I just haven't made enough birdies, and any time a guy isn't playing well enough to win, he isn't putting."

Pate will defend his title against a field that returns 29 of this year's top 60 PGA money winners — including No. 2 Andy Bean, the winner of three events; No. 5 Hubert Green, the winner of two 1978 tournaments; and No. 7 Bill Kratzert.

Though Pate has yet to win this year, he has tied for second three times and finished in the top 10 in eight of the 22 tournaments he has played.

His second-place ties came in the Phoenix, Colonial and the PGA Championship.

In the PGA, Pate missed a short putt on the 18th green that could have won the tournament.

Sonics sign free agent

SEATTLE (UPI) — The Seattle SuperSonics announced Wednesday the signing of free agent guard Dick Snyder, a 12-year veteran who played out his option last season with the Cleveland Cavaliers.

The Sonics will give the Cavaliers two third-round draft picks as compensation for Snyder — one pick in 1979 and the other in a year to be named later.

The 6-foot-5 Snyder came into the NBA in 1966 when he was drafted by the St. Louis Hawks out of Davidson College. With 11,550 career points, Snyder is 17th on the league's all-time list for career scoring.

Snyder played in 56 games last year for Cleveland with a five-point per-game average.

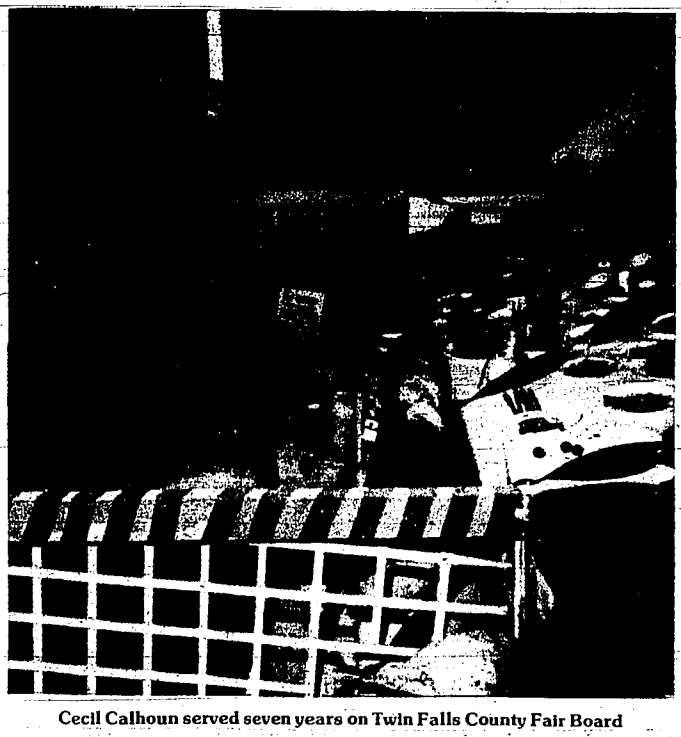
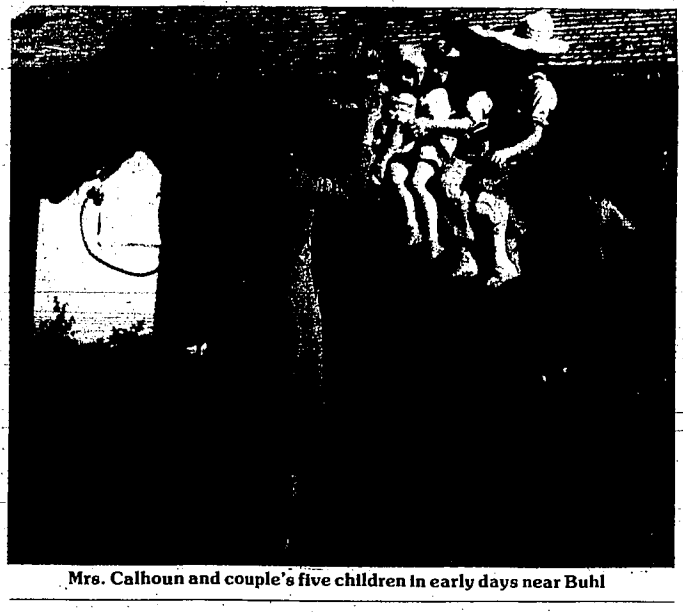
Public issues attract Buhl writer, farmer



Cecil Calhoun served seven years on Twin Falls County Fair Board



Mrs. Calhoun and couple's five children in early days near Buhl

By LORAYNE O. SMITH
Times-News writer

BUHL — Cecil Calhoun has no illusions about influence of private citizens, no matter how informed or dedicated, on legislation at any level of government.

The longtime Buhl farmer, a great-grand-nephew of John C. Calhoun, vice president under Andrew Jackson, probably has testified before both state and federal legislative committees on more issues than anyone else in this area.

What was his success ratio? Sitting in his "office" in the Calhouns' spacious mobile home in Buhl recently, Calhoun shrugged. He describes himself as a "political realist."

"They'll look you right in the eye and swear they're for a bill, then turn around and vote against it because of an amendment," he said.

The politician listens but the action is so hidden in maneuvering that hearing is little but a sop thrown to the public, he believes.

Nevertheless he has lobbied on many issues at the Idaho statehouse, including the sales tax, Sunset law, bus service for Buhl and highway right-of-way. He appeared before U.S. Senate Interior and Insular Affairs committee on Hells Canyon in the nation's capitol.

On the Hells Canyon issue he debated against the late Asher B. Wilson, prominent Twin Falls Democratic leader.

"That's the first time I ever bucked the big boys," Calhoun laughed.

He says many of his original ideas were incorporated by the Senate Agricultural Committee into a new farm program after Sen. Frank Church took them before the group.

Calhoun had written an article to the Western Farm Life magazine outlining his feeling that farmers should be allowed to partake in the federal farm program voluntarily. He first jotted down his notes on the dust of his tractor hood while cultivating beans.

While he technically may have received his impetus for testifying on many diversified public issues while serving as a legislative representative for Twin Falls Granges, Calhoun inherited his interest in public life from his father.

J.M. Calhoun, first prosecuting attorney of McPherson County, Neb., helped to found vo-ag in Nebraska schools. A pioneer settler of Nebraska, the elder Calhoun was a graduate of Northwestern University in Chicago who founded the first school for Sioux Indians at Pine Ridge Agency in 1892.

His son began his first community service when he was elected to the school board in Nebraska at age 27.

He was born at North Platte, Neb., Oct. 19, 1898. After graduating from high school there with honors, he enlisted to fight in World War I. He was to report on Dec. 4 but the Armistice was signed Nov. 11 so Calhoun has no military record.

On Nov. 26, 1923, he married Lettie Harris who had taught school at 17 years of age. After 11 years of married life the couple left Nebraska the victim of the Great Dust Bowl, preceded by repeated crop loss through hail, scorching winds, early frost and drought, long the natural foes of farmers in the Midwest.

When the Calhouns came to Idaho Dec. 18, 1934, they had just $52 to show for 11 years of hard work.

His last crop of grain in Nebraska netted him 1 cent per bushel, Calhoun estimated, after figuring the cost of the seed, threshing and labor.

When he arrived in Buhl, the farms "looked like a weed patch," Calhoun recalled, because of the way the fields were cut up. He had visualized a wide Snake River plain.

His first job in Buhl was sorting spuds at 25 cents per hour. He got his "toehold" into Idaho farming with 40 acres in the Deep Creek area, trading two sections of his old dry land ranch for seven cows, 130 leghorn hen and some machinery.

"That little 40 brought us two new cars and paid our expenses," Calhoun said. After seven years they moved to the Clover area where they "made good money" during World War II, enabling them to buy a "nice" place south of Buhl.

Purchase of this farm south of Buhl, where Calhoun farmed for a quarter of a century, fulfilled his wedding promise to his bride to provide her with a nice home.

"It took us 25 years to do it," Calhoun laughed. His life can be neatly divided into 25 year periods — the first quarter century to obtain a good farm, the second one operating the place, and the third one beginning with his retirement five years ago. On their 50th wedding anniversary the Calhouns sold their farm and moved into Buhl.

Although Calhoun is proud of his farming accomplishments and believes he still holds a red bean production record of 43 hundredweight per acre, he has devoted much of his time for many years to writing.

His ideas on current issues have been widely published. While still on the farm he started writing a column for the Buhl Herald which he continued for 15 years.

His articles have appeared in seven daily papers and one was published in the Congressional Record. One article on law enforcement was broadcast over 250 radio stations. His guest editorials have appeared in the Times-News, Wendell Irrigationist and Northwest Reporter.

Calhoun also has had articles in the Idaho Farmer-Stockman.

But he also has been active in community life in addition to his farming and writing interests. He served on the school board at Deep Creek and joined the Fairview Grange in 1943, holding every office, including state overseer.

He has served on the Production Marketing Administration Board, as legislative representative for Twin Falls Granges and was highway committee chairman in the Fairview Grange.

In the latter capacity he proposed a highway program whereby no farm would be less than one mile from a paved road, one issue on which he was successful.

The farmer-writer served on the Twin Falls County Fair board for seven years. During that time the new grandstand and new housing for livestock were built, 35 acres of additional land was obtained and Calhoun worked with I.T. (Pete) Creed of Twin Falls to develop the Junior Garden program.

Calhoun said he had observed too many of his neighbors making "three moves when they retired — into town, spending their days at the cigar store with the final one to the cemetery."

So he made up his mind he "was not going to dry rot" after he moved into town. He has continued writing letters to the editor, serves on the board of directors for the Buhl Senior Citizen Center which "now has the best facilities for its size of any center in Idaho."

While Calhoun dryly admits he "has kind of cooled off on solving world affairs" he has in recent years spoken on public issues for the Buhl Chamber of Commerce four times and for Kiwanis clubs both here and in Oregon.

He currently is working on a history of his family. It seems likely that his well-used typewriter will be kept busy preventing its owner from "dry rot."

The Calhouns' five children include Donald Calhoun of Twin Falls, Darrell Calhoun of Buhl; Joan Jones of Hailey; Nancy Krohn of Boise, and Leslie Fox of Auburn, Wash.

'Total disability' due to black lung questioned

Heartline is a service for senior citizens. Its purpose is to answer questions and solve problems — fast. If you have a question or a problem not answered in these columns, write Heartline, 114 East Dayton Street, West Alexandria, Ohio 45381. You will receive a prompt reply, but you must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The most useful replies will be printed in this column.

HEARTLINE: My father worked in the coal mines his whole life. He is on Social Security. I think he may be considered disabled for black lung benefits. Can you tell me what is meant by "total disability" due to black lung? — L.T.

Total disability is defined by the miner's level of breathing impairment. In general, it means the inability of the coal miner to do regular work in or around a coal mine or preparation facility due to a breathing impairment caused by pneumoconiosis (black lung). (A deceased miner's employment in a mine at the time of death is not conclusive evidence that the miner was not totally disabled.) Also, if a living miner's employment conditions are changed indicating a reduced ability to do usual coal mine work, such employment cannot be used as conclusive evidence that the miner is not totally disabled.

HEARTLINE: My brother always worked under a Civil-Service-covered job. He has a son who is now 14 years old. How long can my nephew draw the Civil Service survivor annuity? — P.K.

Your nephew will be eligible for a Civil Service survivor annuity until the end of the month before he marries, dies, or reaches age 18, except in the following cases.

(a) Payment to a child aged 18 or over who is incapable of self-support because of disability which began before age 18, stops at the end of the month on which he or she marries, dies, or becomes capable of self-support.

(b) A student-child's annuity stops at the end of the month before the one in which he or she marries, dies, ceases to be a student or reaches age 22, whichever occurs first. A student-child who reaches age 22 during the school year (Sept. 1 through June 30) continues to receive annuity until June 30. A child's annuity that was terminated because he or she ceased to be a student may be resumed if the child again becomes a student. However, a student-child retains the annuity during nonschool intervals if not over five months between school years or terms if he or she shows clear intention to continue as a full-time student at the same or a different school.

HEARTLINE: I am presently 59 years old. My first husband died in 1964. He had worked 35 years in the railroad industry. I was 46 years old at the time. He left me with a 14-year-old son. My son and I drew railroad survivor's benefits for four years until he turned 18 years old. I then went back to work in 1968.

I remarried in 1971 and my husband died in 1974. Will I now be eligible to receive railroad survivor's benefits on my first husband's work record? — C.H.

Under the Railroad Retirement Act, a widow's entitlement to a survivor's annuity ends completely upon her remarriage. Survivor entitlement does not resume even upon the death of her second husband. Therefore, you will not be entitled to an annuity based on your first husband's railroad service.

Depending upon the total of survivor's annuities received by you and your son between 1964 and 1968, you may be eligible for the Residual Lump Sum benefit. Contact the closest U.S. Railroad Retirement Board Office for this information.

HEARTLINE: My mother recently went into a nursing home. I turned a claim into Medicare and they rejected it saying it was custodial care. Can you tell me what this means? — T.S.

Custodial care is care that can be given by persons without professional training or skills. In other words, if you need help with walking, bathing, dressing, eating, getting in and out of bed or taking medicine, or other things that family or friends could help you with, then your condition would be considered custodial and Medicare would not cover you.

For people on Medicare, Heartline has developed an easy-to-understand book covering the entire program. For your copy, send $1.75 to Heartline's Guide to Medicare, 114 E. Dayton St., West Alexandria, Ohio 45381. Please allow six weeks for delivery.

HEARTLINE: I have a problem with taking my prescription drugs. I take three different medications and I am always getting mixed up on these. Can you give me any advice? — R.K.

This problem is very large among older Americans on constant medication. According to medical consultants for Consumer's Union, the following three rules should help.

1. Discuss with your physician the correct dosage and time for taking a prescribed drug. Ask that the prescription state that these instructions be included on the drug label. Advice to "take as directed" is not much help if you forgot the doctor's instructions — or never understood them in the first place.

2. For drugs that are taken regularly, check to see if you can save money by buying as large a quantity as will stay fresh at the rate you use them (ask your pharmacist).

3. If your state does not already have such a requirement, ask your physician to direct the pharmacist to include on each prescription drug label the name of the drug, its strength, the amount (number of tablets, ounces, etc.), and the expiration date (the date after which the medication is no longer sure to be effective, or may be harmful). With this information available to you, leftover portions of some prescriptions could still be used if the family physician prescribes the same medication again. Do not, however, use such leftovers until you have checked with your doctor and confirmed that they are the correct medicine in the proper dosage. Such information on the label could also be life-saving should anyone take an overdose of a medication.

HEARTLINE: Can you tell me what the basic benefits are for a person found eligible under the Black Lung Benefits programs? — T.L.

The basic monthly benefit for a miner totally disabled from black lung or a survivor is 50 percent of the minimum payment to which a totally disabled federal employee in grade GS-2 would be entitled. A totally disabled miner or a survivor with one dependent will have the basic monthly benefit rate increased by 50 percent, with two dependents by 75 percent, and with three or more dependents by 100 percent. Benefit rates are revised in October of each year to reflect any revision in the federal pay scales. The rates as of October, 1977 are:

Miner or survivor with one dependent, $329.80
Miner or survivor with two dependents, $384.80
Miner or survivor with three dependents, $439.70.

Dear Abby

Carrying on at dental office

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I don't want to disclose my source, but I know for a fact that a certain dental nurse is having an affair and is using her boss' dental office for her rendezvous.

I think she has a lot of nerve taking advantage of her boss' dental quarters in this way, and I'm sure he would have a fit if he knew about it. She has been working for him for quite some time and he trusts her.

Should I tell the dentist?

WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: When it comes to dentists, the usual advice is to "Open wide." In this case, I say, "Keep your mouth shut."

DEAR ABBY: May I comment on the letter from the wife who felt threatened by her husband's secretary when she and a girlfriend became self-appointed cheerleaders at the company's bowling games. (Very few wives attended, so the girls went to give the men moral support.)

That wife should smarten up and realize that if her husband's secretary is taking her place at the bowling alley she may be cheering him on in other areas, too.

Perhaps the wife had been invited first, but refused because, "We can't afford a sitter," or "Bowling is so boring."

I finally figured out that my husband's secretary saw him as a handsome young executive who would handle every emergency, while I saw him as the guy who never remembered to carry out the garbage. Small wonder that when his ego needed pampering, he turned to her and they had an affair. When I learned about it, the shock opened my eyes, and I realized that the qualities that I loved in him when we were first married were still there, and that a baby-sitter was cheaper than a divorce. We saved our marriage by working out our problems together.

And I learned how important it was for me to attend the company bowling games.

I think that wife should take a good look at her marriage. Perhaps if the secretary's behavior makes her feel insecure, she has a reason to be. Sign me . . .

WISER NOW

DEAR WISER: The moral to that story is: "Don't permit a substitute to fill in too often, lest the substitute become a permanent replacement."

Pageant underway

Miss Idaho 1978, Kimberly Ann Jensen, is in Atlantic City, N. J., to compete in the 58th annual Miss America Pageant. The four days of pageant competition began Wednesday, with the crowning of Miss America 1979 to be telecast Saturday night. The telecast will feature the 10 semi-finalists (to be announced at the beginning of the television show) competing in all three of the on-stage competitions—talent, evening gown and swim suit. Miss Jensen was accompanied to Atlantic City by the Miss Idaho Pageant's executive director, Royce Chigbrow, and her official chaperone, Betty Chigbrow.

Could antique dealer be Gen. Jackson?

KENNESAW, Ga. (UPI) — In the shadows of Kennesaw Mountain and across the street from a memorial to one of the great battles of the Civil War, "Wildman" Dent Myers peddles his wares and shares a secret with a visitor.

"I've been told by a leading psychic that I am Gen. Stonewall Jackson reincarnated," he confides, stroking a disheveled red beard. "Well, I won't argue with a psychic. I don't want to be spooked."

Myers, a 47-year-old antique dealer who does resemble the Confederate general, has become something of a local legend in this small community nestled between the Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park and suburban Atlanta.

His cluttered, soiled antique shop — "Wildman Dent Myer's Antiques" — attracts Civil War buffs and curiosity seekers from across the country. Some come to cull over his relics; others to meet the notorious Wildman.

On busy days, Myers is wont to stroll bare-footed around the shop with a .44-magnum revolver strapped to his waist. Occasionally, he lets out a rebel yell and falls to the floor as if hit by Yankee musketry.

A part-time film producer and painter, Myers gained local fame by bringing television documentaries to this history-rich community and directing several himself. His vast supply of Civil War weaponry and artifacts has been used in several movies, including a half-dozen in which Myers played an officer of the Southern army.

His shop is packed with Minie balls — cone-shaped rifle bullets — and saddles, muskets, uniforms, medallions and vintage photographs of young men going to war. Much of the stock is a result of 14 years of searching Atlanta, Marietta and Kennesaw Mountain battlefield sites.

It is no coincidence that Myers' shop sits on the site of a former training camp for Confederate recruits and about 100 yards from where Gen. William T. Sherman pitched his tent during the siege of Atlanta.

Ted Hadley and Laverne Koutnik examine opera music

Kopp-Robinson

TWIN FALLS — Richard Kopp of Twin Falls announces the marriage of his daughter, Debbie, to Roy Robinson Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Robinson, Sr., on Sept. 1.

A reception will be held Sept. 10.

MR. AND MRS. ROY ROBINSON JR.

Superman may be out in the cold

TOPEKA, Kan. (UPI) — Superman, the fictional Krypton native noted for changing from a mild-mannered reporter to super hero in a phone booth, will have to find other accommodations.

Bell System telephone companies are phasing out their traditional enclosed outdoor phone booths, leaving Superman out in the cold.

Nationwide, the blue aluminum and glass outdoor booths with folding doors ar being retired to "boneyards for old, obsolete telephones," Southwestern Bell news services manager George Chaffee said.

Vandalism and maintenance costs are forcing the phone company to turn to new drive-up, walk-up or mounted pay phone models that are open to the elements.

"Aluminum and glass booths have been used for everything from outdoor latrines to objects of pure and simple vandalism."

Leif shares Columbus Day

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Every school child knows that in 1492, Columbus sailed the ocean blue to discover America.

Actually, many historians contend the new world was discovered almost 500 years earlier by a Norseman named Lief Erikson.

Americans observe Columbus' feat on the second Monday in October. This year, thanks to President Carter, Americans can honor both explorers on the same day.

Carter Tuesday designated Oct. 9 as Leif Erikson Day in recognition of his discovery of North America and the Scandinavian characteristics of "imagination, courage and perseverence."

Oct. 9 is the second Monday this October and, therefore, also is Columbus Day — a federal holiday.

In making his proclamation under a 1964 congressional resolution, Carter said:

"Stories of brave men battling fearful odds fire our imaginations. We honor such men long after the memories of their adventures have been dimmed by time.

"So it is with Leif Erikson. His original discovery and exploration of North America was the supreme achievement of a race of men who truly were the masters of the sea. His voyage enlarged mankind's horizons and pointed the way west for the others who were to follow."

Northwest opera assoication schedules auditions Monday

TWIN FALLS — The Northwest Opera Association has announced auditions for two forthcoming opera productions in Twin Falls this winter.

Auditions for "An Evening of Opera" and "The Old Maid and the Thief" are set for Monday, Sept. 11, at 7 p.m. in the First United Presbyterian Church at 209 5th Ave. N. in Twin Falls.

For "An Evening of Opera" singers will perform several selections from famous operas. That performance is set for Nov. 4 and 5 at either the new O'Leary Auditorium or the old junior high school auditorium. It will be a tribute to other operas which have been performed in the area.

The performance of "The Old Maid and the Thief" is slated for late January.

According to opera association sopranos, one contralto and a baritone. An accompanist will be provided for those who do not bring their own.

The board of directors of the opera music director Ted Hadley, any interested person is invited to audition for either production Monday.

Both productions require soloists and group or chorus singers. "The Old Maid and the Thief" requires two association decided on the production schedule after the Northwest Opera Guild held its well-attended fall luncheon at the Twin Falls Country Club.

More than 125 guests and guild members attended the affair. Both Sen. Frank Church and Sen. James McClure and their wives, members of the group, sent their reegrets at not being able to attend the meeting.

What's what

Clothing doesn't interest Irish

No nationals are less interested in clothing than are the Irish, it's said. So you can't judge an Irishman by his clothes. This is not to imply the Irish have little taste or talent. On the contrary, Ireland abounds with gifted thinkers. What's fashionable in clothing simply is too inconsequential to take up the time of the typical Irishman. So respected are the arts there, in fact, that since 1969, no Irish writer, painter, sculptor or composer has been required to pay any income tax.

Was none other than Mae West who said, "When I'm good, I'm very good, but when I'm bad, I'm better."

Am told the students of reptiles can't x-ray a snake without killing it.

CANTONESE COOKING

Q. "How do you account for the fact that most Chinese-Americans prefer the Cantonese style of Chinese cooking?"

A. Clearly because most of their ancestors came from that southern coastal province. Fact that Chop Suey is strictly an American dish unheard of in Canton has been reported. It's also true that many of the so-called Cantonese dishes are better known in the United States than in China.

These scholars who make a study of the masculinity-feminity ratios of men and women contend that girls are at their most feminine when in the eighth grade. They're reportedly most masculine in their middle college years. And they thereafter become more and more feminine as they grow older.

The Dead Sea, please note, is not a sea but a lake.

LIZARD

That Cuban land lizard called the Deiroptyx is among the biggest of the beasts that can walk on water. It grows about a yard long and weighs several pounds. When scared near a pond, it stands upright on its hind legs, brings its forelegs up in a clench-fist fighting stance, raises its tail, and runs out over the water surface to the center of the pond. There, it just stops running, so sinks, glub, glub, glub, right to the bottom, where it stays for awhile, safe.

You're more likely to get depressed during heat waves than in any other sort of weather. Or so say researchers at Johns Hopkins University. Maybe so, don't know. Always thought the down-in-the-mouth days most usually tended to come on under overcast skies with intermittent rain. Not just during one cloudy day, I don't mean that. But when the sun falls to show up for a month or more, that's a melancholy matter. Don't believe any heat wave can match it for depression.

Graffiti benefits historians

CHICAGO (UPI) — There's nothing new about the graffiti scrawled across America from the subways of New York to the overpasses of Los Angeles, according to Suzanna Grant.

The walls of the ancient Italian city of Pompeii are covered with the stuff, she points out — and much of it is about the same subject matter of today's graffiti — love, sex and bathroom activities.

The major difference, however, is the graffiti in the ancient city preserved by the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius in 79 A.D. is more poetic and "much more imaginative" than modern graffiti, said Ms. Grant, a consultant of a Pompeii exhibit on display at the Art Institute of Chicago.

Ms. Grant said graffiti was a major mode of communication in Pompeii. It could be done officially and flourished about anywhere, including outside and inside walls of houses, bars, public lavatories and brothels. It was written in Latin, often in verse, and was painted or just plain scratched in the stucco walls.

Some residents rented out walls of their houses for graffiti space — sort of ancient billboards — and professional message writers could be hired. But much of it was done as it is now — without authorization and on the sly.

Ms. Grant said the graffiti gives an interesting display of how people are much the same as they were 2,000 years ago.

"Good health to him who invites me to dinner," wrote one scrawler who seemed largely interested in matters of the stomach. And apparently after not getting any invitations, he added, in a nastier tone: "He at whose house I am not dining is a barbarian."

Money — or lack of it — was a concern of some Pompeiian graffitists.

"The city is too rich," said one inscription by someone apparently in need of a few more bucks. "I propose a sharing of the public treasure among the inhabitants."

And another writer apparently didn't like the price of grain: "No one gives a damn the way we're hit about the grain situation. To hell with the aediline (Pompeii's city council). They're in with the bakers."

In the time before the fateful eruption, Pompeii was in the midst of a municipal election campaign and based on the graffiti it was of widespread interest.

"Proculus, support Sabinus, and in exchange he'll support you," wrote one author, apparently trying to strike up a political deal.

One candidate, named Vatia, got endorsements via graffiti from "the sneak thieves ... (the) whole company of late drinkers ... (and) everyone who is fast asleep."

One apparently non-political resident, however, didn't wany any politician's name scrawled on his home.

"Painter I beg of you not to write anything here. If you inscribe a candidate's name, may he fail in election and be excluded from all office."

Gambling at bars was a big pastime and winners used graffiti to boast: "At Nuceria, I won 855 sesterces at dice — no cheating."

Just like today, a major subject of graffiti was love and sex.

"Fortunatus, you sweet little darling, you great fornicator, this is written by someone who knows you," said an anonymous inscription.

But, one man, perhaps unable to find satisfaction with a frigid wife, wrote: "What use to have a Venus if she is made of marble." Another graffito possibly by a jilted suitor reads: "Lucilia sells her body."

And lovers used graffiti to tell the world their romance was over.

"Serena has had enough of Isadore," said one inscription.

"I could caress Venus' ribs with a stick, and whip her buttocks with a switch," said another, probably written by a scorned lover. "She pierced my heart and I would gladly break her head with a cudgel."

About 7,000 graffiti were found in the ancient ruins and they have enabled historians to learn much about everyday life in Pompeii, Ms. Grant said. There also is evidence of graffiti in other ancient civilizations, she said.

She suggested the experience of Pompeii could teach 20th century graffiti writers a lesson.

"Clean up the grammar and spelling, otherwise we'll go down in history as an illiterate civilization," she said. "What's that going to do to our image in 2,000 years?"

Resort bans skateboards

ZERMATT, Switzerland (UPI) — The Alpine resort of Zermatt has banned skateboards as being "dangerous and a public nuisance."

Zermatt has no gasoline-powered vehicles — the few delivery and garbage trucks are electrically powered — and the town council ruled that skateboards would disturb the peace.

Point count made it easy for everyone to reach six notrump in a regional tournament. North added his 17 points to the 16-18 shown by South's notrump and came up with a 33-35 point total. Enough for six and not enough for seven.

The slam is a good one but the combination of a bad club break and a misplaced queen of diamonds caused some declarers to come up one trick short.

Those who counted the hand carefully made the slam on a squeeze. The first tricks were heart won in dummy, club to the king and ace, second heart won in dummy.

At this point the alert declarers started to prepare a count of the West hand. West had shown six hearts. Three spade leads came next and West followed there. A club to the jack showed West with two clubs. He could not hold more than two diamonds, so the ace and king of diamonds were cashed next. West followed again, whereupon all South had to do was to cash his last two high hearts, discard the 10 of diamonds from dummy and claim. East had to unguard the club 10 to keep the queen of diamonds.

DEMAND

DEMAND MORE FOR YOUR DOLLARS!

DEMAND COMFORT. King Cab contains more stretch-out room than any other small pickup. Even more than some full size rigs. Reclining bucket seats and full carpeting.

DEMAND ROOM. There's up to 11.3 cu. ft. of storage space behind the seats. Which is nice for carrying stuff inside when the weather's not so nice outside.

DEMAND POWER. Punch is delivered by a single over-head cam 2000cc engine. Torque is transferred to a semi floating rear axle by a durable 4-speed transmission. And it carries up to 1,000 lbs. payload.

DEMAND FUEL ECONOMY. From 22 MPG, city to 32 MPG, highway and that's one more thing that's tough to boot.
